

A BRILLIANT WEDDING.

A Story for New Years.

Everybody who knew anything about the Evermonds knew that there had been trouble and disgrace attending them for many years.

First, their oldest daughter, beautiful Nellie Evermond, became infatuated with an opera singer and eloped with him. Following that came the death of the youngest, and pet child, dear little Bessie. Then, the only son, handsome Will Evermond, was arrested for embezzlement, and, although nothing could be proved against him, it was established in many minds that he was guilty. He could not bear the contemptuous glances and scornful words of those who had formerly welcomed him among them with delight. So he departed for a foreign land.

There was left only Mr. Evermond, his wife, and a lovely young girl, of this once proud family.

Susie Gray had come to live with the Evermonds when she was an infant. Her mother had been the only sister of Mr. Evermond's first love, and when she died he took the little girl to his home and treated her with the same consideration that his own children enjoyed. She had been secretly engaged to Will Evermond for some time before his disgrace and departure. After he was accused of embezzlement he had studiously avoided her, and no word of love had fallen from his lips.

Susie had waited patiently for some allusion to the engagement between them, and longed to assure Will that whatever happened she would not change, but her retiring, sensitive nature would not allow her to speak first.

The day of his departure arrived. He had been out with his father in the morning, and only came home to lunch at noon.

After lunch there wanted but one hour to the time appointed for the steamer in which he had taken passage to sail. His trunks had been sent early in the day, and there remained but the farewells to be said ere the unhappy young man left his native land.

Will Evermond had nothing of the coward's blood in his veins, but he shrank from this parting. He loved Susie with all the strength of his deep nature, and he said to his heart, when his trouble first came upon him: "I love her too well to allow her to share my disgrace," and so he was going away.

Mrs. Evermond lay upon the sofa in fashionable hysterics. Will knelt beside her and touched his lips to her brow, murmuring "God bless and keep you always, mother, dear," and strode from the room.

Susie was waiting for him in the hall. He took her tenderly in his arms and kissed her with the old-fashioned, loving tenderness. "Good-by my poor little Susie! If ever my name is cleared from this dreadful stain I will come back and marry you."

"Oh, Will! do not go! I care nothing for the opinion of the world. Stay, and let me prove to you how true a woman's heart can be!"

He put her clinging arms from about his neck, whispered: "wait a few years, darling, it may be that God will bring everything right; good-by," and was gone.

Mrs. Evermond, was shrieking in the parlor, and the servants who were attempting to quiet her found themselves unequal to the task, and sent for Susie. During that whole day Susie had not one moment to herself, but devoted all her time to the fancied needs of the fashionably nervous mother. And because she was his mother the noble girl bore with her.

This happened five years before the time of which I write, and Susie was then twenty-five.

All this time she had waited patiently for some word of love or hope from Will; but none ever came, and she had settled her heart to a quiet state, resolving to devote her life to doing good.

Mr. Evermond had grown fretful and moody since the departure of his son, and upon this New Year's morning he was unusually irritable. A timid ring at the door-bell brought out the exclamation:

"There it goes! I wish the beggars were all in Tophet! Ann, go to the door and drive that beggar away. Box her ears!"

"How do you know that it is a girl?" asked Susie, smiling, as she rose to leave the room.

"Can't I tell every style of beggar in the city by their ring at the bell?" he snarled.

Susie followed Ann to the door, arriving in time to hear a timid little voice say:

"Please, ma'am, I cannot go away without seeing the master! Mother is dying and I must see him."

"An' what'll the likes of yer mither be axin' of him if she be dyin'?" Begone wid ye!" replied Ann, slamming the door, and turning to Susie with a self-satisfied air.

"Let me speak to the child," Susie cried, opening the massive door with her own hands.

The little one stood upon the marble, sobbing with the abandon of childish regret.

"Tell me all about it, little boy," she said, drawing the scantily clad child into the hall, which was warm and fragrant with the breath of rare flowers. "My mamma is most dead, and she told me if I could see Mr. Evermond and give him this paper he would take care of me. My papa is dead, and—"

Here the little fellow broke down and commenced to sob wildly.

"There, there! Don't cry! Tell me your name and give me the paper. I will take it to Mr. Evermond," said Susie.

"My name is Willie Evermond, and—Oh, dear, I have lost the paper. What shall I do?" cried the child.

Susie put her jeweled hand to her pale brow. There was a rush of feeling within too powerful to resist, and for a moment she was speechless.

When she found voice to speak the tones were far off and hollow. She asked:

"What was your father's name?"

"Will, mother always called him. He died four weeks ago. We have not been in this country but five weeks," was the reply.

"It must be Will's child," murmured Susie, as she observed the resemblance of the little face to one whose every lineament was imprinted upon her heart. "Five years since he went away. This child is about four. Poor Will must have married soon after reaching a foreign shore," she soliloquized.

Then taking the child by the hand she led him into the presence of Mr. Evermond and told his simple story.

"Mr. Evermond was pale with anger. "Take the brat away!" he cried. "It is but the artfully contrived story of some greedy wretch who thinks to make money out of my troubles! Why, Susie! only last week a little girl came to me with a pitiful story, claiming to be the child of my daughter Nellie, who, she said, was dead. I thought the child looked altogether too much like some person I had seen, to belong to my family, so I told her to lead me to her home, and I would do my duty by her. She hesitated, but I insisted, and she led the way to a filthy street, and in one of the crowded tenement houses, I found the mother of the little girl, and who do you think it was? Our old nurse, Mary Ann Galloway, who lived with us when Nellie went away, and knew all the particulars of the affair. Just as likely as any way, this boy was sent by the same person. I shall not give him any money; show him out!"

Susie led the child from the room, and bidding him wait for her in the hall, quickly put on a warm shawl, and furs, and taking a hat from the wardrobe, she left the house in company with him. Up one street and down another, until it seemed that they would never stop. Susie followed this shivering child. She felt that she was going to find Will's wife, and her generous heart formed many plans for the relief of the suffering woman upon this way. At last they paused before a rickety-looking building, and the little boy said:

"I'll take hold of your hand, and when I say 'go careful,' you must mind where you step, for the stairs in some of 'em is broke. I know where every broken step comes."

She followed him into a filthy entry, and up a dark, winding staircase, then into a small, bare room. The woman whom he called "mother" was yet alive, although it was evident that her hours were numbered. She made a feeble effort to turn her head toward the new comers, but in vain. Susie bent over her.

The dying woman opened her eyes and whispered:

"Susie! oh, Susie! I did not expect you would come after I had so disgraced you; but I did want father to take care of Willie. You are too good, dear Susie."

The dying woman reached out her hands with one convulsive movement. Willie pillored his head upon her breast, and the weary life went out—Nellie Evermond was dead.

Among her few papers were found a brief history of her life. The villain who had lured her from her home had never deserted her, and at her entreaty had taken her to her native land to die. His death occurred soon after their arrival, and little Willie, who bore his mother's name, was all that was left of her six children.

Mr. Evermond caused the body of his misguided daughter to be buried in a costly casket, and it rests now beneath the quiet shades of Greenwood.

As Susie entered the house after her visit to the wretched home of Nellie Evermond, a well-remembered voice greeted her, and a well-known form hastened to meet her. Will Evermond had returned.

In far-off Italy he met the man whose guilt had been fastened upon himself, and from his dying lips he heard the confession. He hastened to have it put in writing and properly witnessed, then started for home.

With full faith in Susie's truth, his heart beat joyfully, for he knew that it was to call her "wife" that he was hastening homeward.

"Susie, I have come back free from the imputation of crime!" Lowering his voice, he whispered: "Has my darling been true to our troth all these years?"

Womanlike, she wept because of her great joy, and for an answer hid her blushing face upon his broad bosom.

Two months later there was a brilliant wedding at the home of the Evermonds, and gentle Susie stood beside Will Evermond, perfect in her love and trust.

An Irishman Rules Austria. In Austria Count Taaffe has been Prime Minister in the Cisleithan Monarchy since 1870. Count Taaffe is an Irish peer, whose family have been settled in Austria since the deposition of the Stuarts. He is by far the most influential personage in the empire, for the emperor has the strongest affection for him, treats him as a comrade, and takes his advice in all things. He is a short, stoutish man, with a rather Italian head, long, straight black hair, a skipping sort of walk, twinkling eyes, and a Rabelaisian mouth, broadened by continual smiles.

A prominent farmer of Bowling Green, Howard County, Md., Mr. J. T. Ridgeley, said his four children were sick with sore throats and coughs at the same time. Red Star Cough Cure cured them in a week. No opiates.

A Story of the Princess of Wales. A pretty story is told about the Princess of Wales. The scene of it was the mansion house, the occasion a ball given some years ago, and to which, among other "invites," was a provincial mayor, who had the honor of being introduced to the pretty princess. The tale goes, and the truth of it is vouched for, that upon his worship asking, against all rules of etiquette, the princess to grant him a dance, she replied with a touch of delicate humor, "I do not know whether you will not be rather afraid; some of my children are only just recovering from the measles, and you might take them." The wearer of the civic chain, however, was equal to the occasion, for, bowing low, he replied, "I should be delighted to take anything from so charming a source."

Many people's remarks are irrelevant, but if you've got a pain in the arched or a bruise, Salivation Oil will reach the subject instantly. Price 25 cents.

What "Old Fritz" Said. It was an aphorism of Frederick the Great that "Facts are divine things." An undisputed fact is that Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" is the most powerful liver vitalizer extant, and by its characteristic and searching action will cure dyspepsia, constipation, dropsy, kidney disease, sick-headache, and other maladies which, popular opinion to the contrary notwithstanding, are directly traceable to a diseased condition of the liver, by which its work as a purifier of the blood is made incomplete. All druggists.

It's very curious, but doctors don't seem to know anybody well.

"Oh! But I Salivated Him!" was the actual exclamation of an honest physician, spoken of one of his patients to whom he had given calomel for the cure of biliousness and a diseased liver. And he had salivated him for certain, from which he never recovered. All these distressing consequences are avoided by the use of Dr. Pierce's "Pleasant Purgative Pellets," a purely vegetable remedy that will not sate, but produce the most pleasing effect, invigorate the liver, cure headache, dyspepsia, biliousness, constipation and piles. By druggists.

We would be pleased to know of a man or woman who has never had headache or been subject to constipation. As these seem to be universal troubles a little advice may be in order. Why should persons cram their stomachs with nauseating purgative pills, etc., which sicken and debilitate when such a pleasant and sterling remedy as Prickly Ash Bitters will act mildly and effectively on the liver, kidney, stomach and bowels, and at the same time tone up and strengthen the whole system, causing headache, constipation and all such distressing evils to quickly disappear.

"Consumption Can be Cured." Dr. J. S. COMBS, OWENSVILLE, Ohio, says: "I have given Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil with Hypophosphites to four patients with better results than seemed possible with any remedy. All were hereditary cases of Lung diseases, and advanced to that stage when Coughs, pain in the chest, frequent breathing, frequent pulse, fever and Emaciation. All these cases have increased in weight from 16 to 28 lbs., and are not now needing any medicine."

Republican Valley Stock Farm. The popularity of Percheron horses in the west has developed some very extensive establishments for their breeding, one of the oldest being the Republican Valley Stock Farm, owned by Messrs. Avery & Coleman, of Wakefield, Clay County, Kansas. They are thoroughly reliable men with whom it is a pleasure to deal, and thoroughly posted in their business. Mr. Avery being one of Kansas' pioneers and for most of the time having been engaged in breeding draft horses, while Mr. Coleman's many years' experience as foreman for M. W. Dunham, especially fits him for the business. Write them for catalogue No. 5, it gives pedigrees and descriptions and is sent out free.
