EYE DISEASES.

How They Are Spread by Towels, Flies, and Spectacles.

To mention a few of the modes of contagion, I have to speak, in the first place, of towels, especially of that abominable institution known as the roller-towel, which has been used so much in asylums where forty, fifty, or more children use the same towel, whether they have granular lids or not. True, in a great many of these cases the existence of granular lids was not known; but even in cases in which the existence of the disease was evident, the ignorance or careless of the persons in charge has allowed transmission by means of towels to be one of the most frequent sources of contagion. As a carrier of the contagion, the house-fly plays an important role, especially in cases of young children who are not able to protect themselves against the visits of this little animal. Attracted by the sweetish odor of the discharge it loved ones are mouldering in the dust who will settle upon the eyes of children affected with the disease, especially inmight have been spared for years. The fected with the disease, especially in-elight cough was unheeded, the many symptoms of disease that lurked within claws to the other eye or eyes of sleepclaws to the other eye or eyes of sleeping infants.

Spectacles may be the carrier of the contagion. I remember the case of a young lady who could not explain satisfactorily how she came to have granular lids. Upon her return to school she mentioned that she had granular 1 ds. whereupon one of her classmates sa d: "Why, that is the disease which I have been suffering from for the last six months." ## THE HOUSE OF ARGYLL.

Distinguished Members of the Family to Which Sir Colin Campbell Belongs.

It is related in the argument of the Campbell case that when the marquis of Lorne married the Princess Louise, one of the Campbell Highlanders exclaimed: "Eh, mon, the queen must be a proud leddy to-day." Whatever may be the merits of the great divorce case, it can not to-day be a source of much pride to the queen that her family is in any way associated with so unseemingly a scandal.

The moral heredity of the Campbells of the Argyll family is a strange mixture of good and bad. They claim descent through a line of Celtic chiefs from King Arthur, and certainly for nearly five hundred years they have occupied an important and often distingu shed place in history. As these Highland lords, these earls, marquises, and dukes march down this stretch of time they present a singular array of lofty religious principle, utter lack of moral obligation; chivalric loyalty, base intrigue; peers in the realm of literature and science, worse than commoners in the ranks of ordinary culture; friends of men and women of the highest purity of character, the associates of ruffians and wantons. As a rule they were courteous in their homes and brave in their conflicts.

The first marqu's was a Covenator and a soldier, who fought the royalist forces, and on the reconciliation and restoration he placed the crown on the head of Charles II. It was even thought the king would marry a daughter of the marquis, and thus anticipate by two centuries the union of the royal family and the house of Argyll. But placing the crown on the king's head did not assure the marquis of saving his own head. He was condemned for his previous dislovalty, and, according to the ### Care of Horses' Feet.

It is generally conceded by horsemen that lameness originates chiefly in the faulty treatment of the horse's foot. This fact suggests several recommendations for the mitigation of the evil: First, bare feet. It may be stated as a general proposition that any horse with fairly good feet need never be shod at all. In the barefooted horse the heels spread out, the frogs descend, ridges form upon the soles, giving to the bottom of the feet a good purchase upon either a rough or smooth surface. He soon learns to rely upon himself and so adjusts his equilibrium to motion that he neither strains himself, nor slips nor stumbles. Horsemen have often given this plan a short, faint-hearted trial, but on the first manifestations of foot soreness at the end of a few weeks, and before the feet have become inured to the change, usually have the shoes replaced again .- [Spirit of the Turf.
