t Is Not the Least Important Factor in a Man's Career.

A name is certainly not the least important factor in a man's career. How much more difficult would it be for a Muggins or a Finigan to gain acceptance as a poet, however great his talent, than for a Tennyson or Milton. No matter how great a man's energy, alent or courage may be, an odd or idiculous name will be a clog to him brough life, and add immensely to his tifficulties in making his way upward, If what avail is a man's aristocratic appearance, correct dress, coat of the nost fashionable cut and sa tisfactory palance at the bank if his visiting card condemns him to pity or to ridicule? What a consolation it must be to a lady afflicted with a disagreeable name o know that she may have an opportunity of changing it for a better in a way at once gratifying to her pride and her affections. This privilege of the ladies has been assumed by the popes, who change there names when they are chosen as successors to St. Peter. The introducer of this papal custom, Sergius . II., may well be excused for the inabove this weakness, and he adopted the Greek form of his proper name. which signifies "Black Earth," and the earned Erasmus made a similar transformation of his Dutch name Gerard. In the time of Louis XIV. a distinguished writer, who was a member of the academy, a councilor of state and a friend of chelien, had the misfortune to bear inappropriate name of Gueux (be, gar). Can we wonder at his adopting the name of his patrimonial estate and cailing himself Balzac? Many other instances might be quoted of men of talent and eminence being expensive luxury."-[Boston Journal. lissatisfied with the names that were borne by their ancestors. Some people in their anxiety to compensate their children for the vulgar or ridiculous family names which they have inherited couple with them what they consider aristocratic, euphonious Christian names. Hence we have such combinations as Gladys Beatrice Higgs, Constance Aurelia Smith, and Victor Augustus Jones. One can sympath ze with the fact that many pleasing hours of consultation and discussion are given to the young mother and her husband in deciding what name will sound most mellifluously and assort most fittingly with the sterling and attractive qualities which are so percertibly packed up in that little cherub, their first-born. The ancients had many superstitions as to names, and even elevated the study to a science under the title of ononmantia. When the Romans raised an army or numbered the citizens they were always careful that the first name taken should be an auspicious one. More than one emperor owed his elevation simply to his name, and Casar in his expedition to Africa gave a command to obscure Scipio because the people believed that the Scipios were invincible in Africa. Similar influence weighed with the French envoys who went to negotiate a marriage between one of the Spanish princesses and Louis VIII. They rejected Urraca, the elder and more beautiful princess, who was intended for their royal master, and preferred her sister because her name, Blanche, had a more musical sound. A Spanish ambassador to the court of Elizabeth considered his dignity slighted when the queen appointed a wealthy citizen to receive him because his host bore the very short name of John Cuts. He soon found, however, that if Cuts had a short name, he had a long purse and a right royal way of dipping into it fer the sake of upholding the English name for hospitality. - All the Year Round.

Untimely Visitors.

There are some people in the world who seem to have been born with the idea that visiting is one of the fundamental rules of living, and with this principle firmly fixed in their minds live up to it accordingly, without any thought whatever of those they annoy by so doing. They come in at any hour in the day, usually in the merning, that most precious working-time for women, just to chat about something of not the slightest importance to the person visited. "Oh, we are not going to detain you; we won't stop a moment," they say. While the hostess listens and repties courteously to the conversation of her guests, ker ear catches the sound of her clothes, that she had placed in a boiler on the stove, boil ng over, and, with a hurried apology, she hastens to the kitchen, adds more cold water, leaves the cover of the boiler off and is quickly back again with the visitors, who remark on the loveliness of the day, and what a pity it is for any one to stay in the house such weather.

The hostess makes some polite reply agreeing to the statement made, but hinks of her washing in the other room waiting for her, how she would have had it on the line but for her untimely visitors, who, though having remained fully an hour, always going, yet see a not any nearer to it than when first seated. After another hour spent in the same way, during which time the nervous housekeeper has made many journeys to and from the kitchen, the guests leave, remarking that they couldn't possibly remain any longer, and the wearied woman goes back to her washing and with nervous haste tries to make up her time wasted. The lothes must all be out before noon, and dinner for the husband and children on the table at that time. Why such people if they must visit, should choose the busiest part of the day to call upon women whom they know to have all they can do, toil as hard has they may, to get their work well done, in preference to those having more leisure at their disposal, like the riddle of the Sphinx, is hard to answer. It does seem as though these people had missed their vocation and book canvassers lost a valuable acquisition. - American CultiAn Unbiased Verdict.

That sensible woman, Queen Elizabeth of Roumania, has managed to secure an opportunity of hearing plain and wholeome truths about herself after a fashion sually denied to royalties by the cringing ourtiers who surround them. Her majesty, who devotes much of her time to music, vas so persistently assured by her attendants that her voice was more than equal that of any prima donna that she began o consider whether she was justified in concealing such a talent in the napkin. But before displaying her gifts coram popalo she wisely resolved to obtain an unbiased opinion. This she got from the eminent Professor Dumanois, in Bucharest, to whom she went incognito, and who, after trying her powers, informed her bluntly that she had, perhaps, just sufficient voice to qualify her for a chorus girl in operetta, to which, however, her face and figure were unfortunately not adapted .-London Special.

What It Costs to Go to College. A German, returning from a visit to America, writes to a German paper the following charge against our colleges: "In America, in this land of the free, it is the sad fact that university culture is a prize which is only accessible to the sons of rich men." FORTUNE'S FICKLE FAVORS.

Showered Down on To Chicago Young

Men. The last list of numbers which drew prizes in The Louisiana State Lottery brought a welcome surprise to two persons in Chicago. Only a poor man can appreciate the feelings of Peter M. Vermaas when upon looking the list over discovered that he held one-tenth of the ticket which drew the capital prize of $150,000 at the drawing of March 15th. The ticket was numbered $66,551. Vermaas did not go crazy as some men might when he reflected that he was the happy possessor of $7,500, for although the oneenth ticket drew $15,000, the ticket was the joint property of Peter M. Vermaas and his brother Cornelius, and each received $7,500.

Peter M. Vermaas is superintendent of the advertising department of D. B. Fisk & Co., Wabash avenue and Washington street, and lives at No. 379 South Robey street.

Cornelius Vermaas was until recently a pressman for Rand, McNally & Co., but is now employed by Apple gate & Bush, corner Van Buren and Clark streets.

To a representative of the Merchant Traveler Mr. Peter Vermaas said that in The Louisiana State Lottery. The of appetite. I purchased a trial bottle of one-tenth of $300-$30.

In February they contributed $3 was the goose that laid the golden egg and drew $15,000, as one-tenth of $150,000, the capital prize. The tickets were taken in Peter's name, and on discovering that one was a lucky winner, he turned it over to the American Express Company which collected the $15,000 and paid it to Peter M. Vermaas in gold. Peter immediately turned over half to Cornelius and it was placed in bank.

Neither of the brothers exhibit any symptoms of big head as the result of their enviable luck. They told the Merchant Traveler that they would continue in their present occupations and let the money lay in bank until they find a good real estate investment, when they will convert it into land and build homes for themselves. - Chicago (Ill.)
