OFFICIAL CITY & COUNTY PAPER.

ON THE FRONTIER.

There is nothing small or narrow in the Western way of doing things, and when, in the latter part of 1871, the Uppia Township Co. sent out its advertisements, pamphlets and circulars, setting forth the unparalleled opportunities offered for obtaining much with little outlay, many responded, eager to secure the privileges...

I sit here and watch the covered wagons as they go farther west. Some are seeking like the old nursery jingle, "some few east, some few west and some few over the Cuckoo's nest." Yet two or three remain until the county is thickly settled, towns are all on the R. R., which did come up the valley in ten years instead of one!

It was a monotonous uneventful journey of three hundred miles. Riding along day after day, the rattling of the harness, the only accompaniment to the sound of the horses' feet, grew very irksome. The newness of everything was unpleasantly prominent, particularly in the suburbs of Lincoln and two little towns through which we passed.

The two boys entertained me with blood-curdling stories of murdered men and every now and then pointed out a lonely grave, in which a man lay, who had been killed by his partner. We spent one day and night at the mouth of Plum Creek, to rest our tired horses, before crossing the divide between the Platte and Republican, which was thirty-five miles and no water for man or beast.

It was our custom in preparing for the night for L. to be in the wagon and unfold and spread the bed on top of the load, while I stood outside to straighten and arrange. This night as I took my place the darkness seemed more dense, the lantern on the inside making it all the blacker out and the mysterious stillness only increased the weirdness. I almost felt the Indians and I scrambled into the wagon, saying "I just can't stay out there, I'm afraid!"

Leaving this place we traveled on reaching our destination on May 29th, having been two weeks on the road. We found the large party of nine wagons which started two weeks before we did, had only been in twenty-four hours. Coming to our "claim," which had been located the fall before, into the Co. sent out the locating party, we pitched our tent and here began our new life.

In front of the tent was a shade of poles and willows, to the side the covered wagon bed, which answered for our small storeroom. A gunny-sack was used for carpet and I kept it swept all around the ground and a few boards, a little by little conveniences were added and I felt quite proud of the seats which I made; two three-legged stools and one four-legged. Two we covered with buffalo hide. During the fall when the soldiers left, we added to our party some would get on the bed for the want of room.
