AN ANCIENT CHESS KING.

Happy some rajah first in the ages gone
Amid his languid ladies fingered throne,
While a black nightingale, sun swart as he,
Sang his one wife love's passionate oration;
Happy then mayst have pleased Old Prester
John
Among his pastures when full royally
He sat in tent, grave shepherds at his knee,
While lambs of balsam winked and glimmered on.
What dost thou here? My masters are all dead.
My heart is full of ruth and yearning pain
At sight of thee, O king, that hast a crown
Outlasting theirs, and tell of greatness fled
Through cloud hung nights of unaltered ring
And murmur of the dark majestic town.
—Joan Ingelow.

"A SAD NIGHT."

How Carlyle and Leigh Hunt Differed Even About the Sky.

Leigh Hunt and Carlyle were once present at a small party of equally well known men. It happened that the conversation rested with these two, and the others sat, well pleased to listen. Leigh Hunt talked on in his bright and hopeful way, when Carlyle would drop some heavy tree trunk across his pleasant stream and bank it up with philosophical doubts and objections at every interval, but Hunt never ceased his joyous anticipations nor saturnine Carlyle his infinite demurs. The listeners laughed and applauded by turns, and now fairly pitted them against each other as the philosophers of hope, mess and unhelpfulness. The contest continued with ready wit, philosophy, pleasantry and profundity and extensive knowledge of books and character.

The opponents were so well matched that it was quite clear that the contest would last indefinitely, but night was far advanced, and the party now broke up. They all sallied forth, and, leaving the close room, the candles and the arguments behind them, found themselves under a most brilliant and starlight sky. They looked up. Carlyle can have no answer to this, thought Hunt, and shouted: "There! Look at that glorious harmony that sings with infinite voices an eternal song of hope in the soul of man!"

Carlyle looked up. They all remained silent to hear what he would say. They began to think he was silenced at last, but out of the silence came a few low toned words in a broad Scotch accent: "Eh, it's a sad night!"

They all laughed and then looked thoughtful. There might be some reason for sadness, too—that brilliant firmament perhaps contained infinite worlds, each full of struggling and suffering beings.

Unrecognized.

Perhaps when one makes that conversational blunder which is known as a "break" it is best to say nothing whatever about it. Extenuation only renders a bad matter worse.

Not long ago a lady was visiting the studio of a portrait painter and trying to make herself as agreeable as possible in return for a welcome and afternoon tea. She enjoyed the pictures, although in each case they seemed to her much idealized, and she went from one to another, civilly expressing her approbation.

"Ah," she said to her hostess, "you must tell me all about them! Who is this?"

"Mrs. Lorraine."
"I don't know her; charming, but of course I can't speak for the likeness."
"I try to be faithful," said the artist humbly.

"Oh, I know! I know! And who is the very pretty lady in brown?"
"That," said the other, with some frigidity, "is myself!"—Youth's Companion.

Below Decks During a Fight.

The position of the men below decks on a modern vessel of war, they being isolated by the watertight hatches and doors, has been frequently commented upon, but their position is not always so hard as has been supposed. On the Brooklyn, during the fight before Santiago, Admiral Schley sent orderlies among the men behind casemates and below decks telling them the effects of the shots and how the fight was going. When the chase of the Colon began, the orderlies went down to the stoke holes and engine room and told the men there that the race had begun and everything depended upon them. The wisdom of the action was partly shown in the outcome.—Argonaut.

People of Stone Age.

"The stone age" is not, properly speaking, an expression of time. It refers to a stage in civilization which passed long ago in Europe and Asia, but still lingers in some out of the way corners of the world. A report of La Plata museum in Paraguay describes the Quayquois, a small tribe of 500 or 600 living near the headwaters of the Acaray river, as a true stone age people. They are timid, harmless folk, desperately afraid of the whites, and with reason, as they have been shamefully abused by them. They have no weapons for defense save bows, lances and stone tomahawks. They are undersized and round headed.

Impressing the Neighbors.

Mr. Wigsby—See here, my love, there is some mistake. The baggage deliverer man has left seven trunks on our front porch.

Last Sunday evening, at six o'clock, Miss Ethel Ransom of this place was united in marriage to Mr. Ralph Waits of Cambridge, the affair being solemnized by Rev. N. S. Fouch at the home of the bride's parents. The happy couple left on the evening train for a short visit to the exposition and with friends in Iowa. In common with many friends we extend congratulations and best wishes for the abundant success of their venture.

Dr. J. E. Hathorn, the Republican nominee for representative, is entitled to and should receive a warm support, especially at the hands of his neighbors and friends in this section. We believe in local pride, and it may properly be exercised in this case. The doctor, all agree, is well qualified for the position. He is a man of force and conviction, with vigor of body and mind. His acquaintance with the needs of this county and state is sufficiently wide and varied to warrant us in expecting him to give a good account of himself in the halls of legislation. Vote for Hathorn.

Last Excursion to Omaha.

The success of the Burlington's excursion to Omaha, Sunday, October 23, is assured if the clerk of the weather does his duty. Everything depends upon him. The rate is lower than ever before offered, only $1.25 for the round trip. Tickets will be good to return until October 31st. Special train with through coaches for Omaha leaves McCook at 11 p. m., October 23, arriving at Omaha 9:35 a. m., October 24.

The program for the week beginning October 24th will be as varied and interesting as that of any week since the exposition opened its gates last June. It will include daily band concerts, exhibition drills by the U. S. Life Saving Crew and ascensions of the Santiago War balloon. The live stock exhibit the best in the history of the world, will be open all week. All the Midway attractions will be in full swing and the exhibits in the Government, Mines and Mining, Art Agricultural, Electrical, Manufacturing and State buildings will be as well worth seeing as at any time during the progress of the exposition. If you have not yet visited the great fair don't let this opportunity go by. If you have seen it, go again. Tickets and full information at R. & M. R. R. depot.
