From Aurora to Mendota, forty-six miles, forty minutes were consumed. From Mendota to Galesburg, eighty miles, the time was seventy-five minutes. Philippine Letter.

Manila, Dec. 1st, 1898. Dear mother: We are here in Manila. It took us twenty-eight days steady sailing to get here. We stopped six days in Honolulu. One man died on the Senator. He was not a soldier, but a sailor. The Valencia came with us.

We had nice weather and that was in our favor. The mumps was the only sickness we had on board. I had them when we got on shore, and I am just getting over them now. It has rained most of the time since we landed here; but the weather is not so very hot at present.

We are encamped on the Spaniard's parade ground, inside of the walled city. The wall is about twenty feet high around this part of the town, and it is about six miles around it. The Spanish army is just across the street, and the captured rifles are stacked, waist high, inside. The parade grounds are walled with mortar balls and shells. The natives are copper-colored, antiquated-looking creatures, and I have not made any acquaintances among them.

We are going to move into barracks in a day or two and it will be better for us. Do I like Manila? Not; but as soon as peace is declared I can get out and I will. Mother, you need not worry about me rushing into danger needlessly; for I have no inclination to do so. But as I am a soldier, I hope I will always be willing to do my duty, and that means danger enough sometimes.

It is clean out of the world here and it oppresses me. I wish I was at home with you.

I miss THE MCCOOK TRIBUNE. I often wish for it on Saturday night; and I miss the old familiar faces in my far away Nebraska home. New scenes, however grand they may be, can not be compared to home; and I wish I could see the prairies out there covered with snow and throw a few balls time about with the boys. But in less than six months I hope to come home. I could write a week, but the mail goes out soon and I must close. Give my love to all and receive the same from your loving son. Good by to everybody.

THOMAS B. HARRIS.
