CHAPTER III. Poverty presses harder on a man's pride generally than on a woman's...

Harold Dynevor was a good son, and a brave man; but poverty tried him sorely...

Harold was a gentleman farmer. He worked quite as hard as many farmers who did not own the prefix...

"You're tired out, Harold," said Kitty gently. "I'm sure you work as hard as any of your own men..."

"All right, dear," he said gratefully. "It may do me good, for I've a splitting headache."

Mrs. Dynevor waited till her daughter was out of hearing, then she asked anxiously: "Is there anything wrong, Harold?"

"There was consternation at the Manor and the Uplands; but when Frank Dynevor's will was read, his brother was amazed to find there was no mention whatever of his promise to secure Harold's future..."

No wonder the Charles Dynevors were aggrieved. They would not have grudged the estate to Lillian; but that it should revert to her mother, that a girl who had never seen the old house three years before should have power...

Perhaps their sense of injustice made the Charles Dynevors keep aloof from the young widow, and so they did not realize how quickly her acquaintance with Eustace Lindon ripened into intimacy...

Very little news of her reached Easthill. That she had a second child—another daughter—and that her health failed so rapidly she was obliged to live always in the south of France...

"She will have left him all the ready money; but she can't be so base as to bequeath him the Manor," Charles Dynevor said to his wife.

"I don't know. She was perfectly infatuated with him, and I suppose she would think of her child," replied Mrs. Dynevor.

But there was no mention of her child in the will. Mr. Dynevor paid half a guinea for a copy of it. It had been made immediately after the death of her firstborn, and it simply bequeathed "all property of which I may die possessed, real or personal, of every description whatever, to my dear husband, Eustace Lindon."

It had been drawn up by an English lawyer, and witnessed by the doctor and nurse who attended little Lillian in her last illness. Everything was perfectly in form. Mr. Proctor, the leading solicitor of Marton, who had been at school with Harold Dynevor, and remained his close friend, said that to upset it would be quite impossible.

So Eustace Lindon enjoyed his thousands and the Dynevors grew poorer every year. The father lived till his only son was old enough to take up the burden he had borne so bravely. His dying words charged Harold to be good to his mother and Kitty, and never, if he could help it, accept any favor at the hands of Eustace Lindon.

"I can't explain it to you, my boy," said the dying man, solemnly. "But I have thought a great deal about the past since my illness began. I would not say a word to your mother, lest she should brood over it; but I can't help feeling Lindon did not play straight. Your Aunt Nina was little more than a child when he married her; but she was singularly frank and true. Knowing as she did that Dynevor Manor had been in our family for centuries, I can't believe she would have left it away from the old name willingly."

"Do you mean you think the will was a forgery?" asked Harold. "No; I believe it was obtained from her by undue influence. When she was very ill he must have worked on her fears in some way or other. I can't explain what I think, Harold; but I seem to know Nina Lindon never did us such a wrong willingly. "I could understand it better if she had left anything to her child," said Harold. "The injustice to us would have been the same, but it would have been more natural."

Mr. Dynevor shook his head. "It's a mystery we shan't fathom here, my boy. Only, with the instinct God sends sometimes to the dying, I seem to feel that Lindon is to blame. If he comes to live at the Manor, avoid him by every means in your power."

And that was the story of the past. It was not strange that, remembering his father's last words, it was torture to Harold Dynevor to think that the mortgage on his mother's home was held by Eustace Lindon.

Kitty and the tea tray came in together. There was a capable woman servant at the Uplands, but she had her hands pretty full; and both Mrs. Dynevor and her daughter were thoroughly domesticated, sweet, home-keeping women both of them, not learned in 'ologies and science, perhaps, but well grounded to make those about them happy.

Harold felt quite refreshed after his tea, and asked his sister cheerfully if any one had been there that afternoon. "Only Helen Craven. She wants us to go to dinner there next week. I said Tuesday would suit you best."

When the Cravens settled at Dynevor Manor they made it perfectly clear to the family at the Uplands that they regarded them as friends and equals. The young Dynevors had spent some of their happiest days at the Manor, and Helen Craven was Kitty's closest friend.

"Tuesday will do nicely," said Harold. "I shall be glad of a little talk with the general. He may be able to tell me something about his landlady."

"Helen was quite radiant," went on Kitty. "It seems Alick is coming home next week on leave, and is going to bring his friend Captain Tempest with him."

She spoke with studied carelessness, and yet the speech had cost her an effort. Kitty and her mother were both dreadfully afraid Harold cared for Helen Craven. Loving him as they did, they were of course persuaded he could have won the general's daughter had he only made up his mind to woo. Both believed only his poverty and pride had kept him silent, and it had come on them as a blow when they discovered the great interest Helen took in the visits of her brother's chum, and they were forced to see that Captain Tempest was already more to her than Harold had ever been.

Kitty made this remark tentatively, as a sort of breaking the news to Harold that if he entered the lists he would be too late.

Dynevor never guessed Kitty's suspicions. He smiled quite cheerfully as he said: "Sets the wind in that direction? Well, you will miss Helen dreadfully, Kitty, if she marries; but she is 22, so I suppose it's time she began to think of such a thing, and Jack Temple is a right down good fellow. I took a great fancy to him when he was here at Christmas. I only hope you'll have as good fortune, Miss Kitty, when your time comes."

Kitty and her mother exchanged congratulatory glances, which seemed to say: "He does not mind! he could not have cared for her really after all." (To be continued.)

NOBLE RED MAN.

Difficult for the Indian to become Self-Supporting.

How to make the Indian self-supporting is a problem which William L. Brown tackles in the Southern Workman. He would solve the problem by making the red men a race of goat herders.

The limitations imposed upon them by the nature of the country in which they live and the lack of an inherited habit of work, together with the pauperizing tendency of the ration system, make it difficult for them to progress very rapidly toward self-support.

And since a training having this end in view should be one of the factors in their education the question is one in which the schools should be particularly interested. It has been suggested that goat culture might offer a solution of the difficulty in some localities.

The Indians' familiarity with and love for animals makes herding a natural calling for them, and they can therefore be easily trained in the care of stock. Then, too, goats can sustain life where cattle cannot. That goat culture may be made profitable there is little doubt, since there appears to be a ready market for the various products. Statistics show that the importation of the skins, from which the chief value is derived, increased 28 per cent in the fiscal year of 1898 as compared with 1897.

Most of the goat skins used in this country are imported. It has been estimated that the market value of the importation of these skins amounts to twenty million dollars.

Parents Liability for Child's Fare. A parent entering a railroad train with a child non sui juris, but old enough to be required to pay fare, is held, in Braun vs. Northern Pacific Railroad Company (Minn.), 49 L. R. A. 319, to be under an implied contract to pay the child's fare and, on refusal to do so, liable to be expelled from the train with the child, even though the parent offers to pay his own fare or on refunding it to him if he has paid it.

Time waits for no man—unless he is carrying the ticket for his watch.

Submarine Trip to Europe.

Holland, the submarine boat man, proposes to cross the Atlantic in a new craft which will live under water or travel like an ordinary, respectable steamer, just as the owner desires.

He has planned the itinerary and declares there is no more to be feared in making this experiment than when he first took a dive in the original Holland boat. His new invention will go first to the Bermudas, thence to the Azores, Lisbon and Cadiz, Spain. Much of the trip will be made under water, he says.

Budapest's Up-to-Date Service.

A new telephone service has been established at Budapest, the object of the scheme being to supply subscribers with reports of all the important occurrences which are ordinarily chronicled in the daily papers.

The service has a main line 168 miles in length, and it is connected with private houses and various public resorts. Between 7:30 a. m. and 9:30 p. m. twenty-eight editions of news are spoken into the transmitter by ten leather-lunged individuals, who work in shifts of two.
