Last Sad Rites.

Monday afternoon in the Methodist church the last sad rites were performed | ton, Kansas. over the earthly remains of Worth Coleman, whose accidental death in an un- on business. named lake among the Wyoming mountains not far from Hailey, was described mid-week, on business in a recent issue of THE TRIBUNE by the pen of the Wyoming state sheep inspector.

Wednesday, September 4th, on No. 1, at the first opportunity after receiving in the week, from Grinnell, Iowa. the telegram from Mr. Shaffer of Hailey, Wyoming, announcing the boy's death, from Danbury, Tuesday, on a visit. W. T. Coleman departed for Wyoming, to secure the body and bring it to Mc-Cook for burial, if it were a possibility On Monday morning he arrived on No. 2 with the remains, which were exhumed from a primitive grave with the greatest difficulty and conveyed to Rock Springs, Wyoming, for shipment. We shall not attempt a description of the almost impossible conditions under which the father battled for the recovery of the body of his son from those primeval Wyoming mountains and conveyed them 175 miles to the railroad. It was a heroic deed performed under circumstances which might well appall the stoutest heart. After accom-lishing the disinterment under the mor suasion, the remains had to be carried here on business, close of past and first for miles down the precipitous, rocky of present week. mountain side on an improvised stretcher by two men. When the ground became less rough and steep, an Indian sled was attached between two ponies and the descent of the mountains was continued. There are no roads or trails in that section and directions are taken from peak to peak. In the timber region it is said that for a stretch of a mile at a last Friday night, from her visit to time the Indian sled never touched Germantown relatives. earth at all, sliding over the fallen trees the while. A wagon was used as they approached the less difficult part of the journey. The effort of Mr. Coleman is a high tribute to fatherly love; and the work of his assistants worthy unstinted praise. The funeral services were conducted in the Methodist church, Monday afternoon, by Rev. L M. Grigsby, assisted by Rev. W. J. Turner of the Congregational church, after which the remains were again committed to Mother Earth in Longview cemetery. The church was from their visit in Colorado. crowded with sympathetic relatives and friends and there was a superb wealth of floral decorations and tributes embracing a cha. ming and touching display of emblems, palms, ferns, potted plants and cut flowers.

The pall-bearers were A. W. Berry, G. D. Burgess, Claude Odell, Glenn Hupp, Walter Thorgrimson and George Campbell, and the members of class 1903 attended in a body.

The services were very touching, especially the expression of the tribute of love which came from the lips of the dead boy's associates up in that wild, uncivilized sheep country, where he was greatly loved and admired for his principles and manliness.

We are but echoing the unanimous sentiment of this community in expressing for Mr. and Mrs. Coleman and the relatives and friends generally the profoundest sympathy in this heart-wringing bereavement and great loss.

CHARLES ELLSWORTH COLEMAN Was Forbes in church work. born in McCook, Nebraska, August 1st, 1885; died near Hailey, Wyoming, Au gust 23rd, 1901; was 16 years and 22 days old. Was drowned accidentally in an unnamed lake near Hailey, Wyoming, August 23, 1901. Body was recovered from the lake on the 30th and buried on in from Has' i, Monday night, and acthe lake shore, whence it was subsequently removed to this city for interment.]
