IF Joe Burns knows anything certain about the matter, Lincoln wants another newspaper. Well, the Journal is the only daily paper approaching the "real thing" they have at present, that's sure, and it represents both factions at the capital as well as one newspaper can be expected to do the impossible.

THE United States supreme court has handed down its decision in the application of Minnesota against the Northern securities company. It is in favor of the company. The gist of the decision is that the court has no jurisdiction. It is also asserted that there is no way in which the title of the state of Minnesota can be amended to bring it within the jurisdiction of the court.

GOVERNOR SAVAGE is curious to know why the Lincoln Journal continues to roast him, after the governor does just what all the Journal management petitioned him to do, and asks the Journal why? The Journal's column and a half answer reminds us of the average response to a toast. It is the unwritten law that it is not necessary to speak to the question.

WHEN one takes account of the factional mendacity and insincerity in Nebraska politics, is mindful of the ayidity with which partisanship regardlessly assails and destroys character and notes the quality of many who take front rank in public affairs, one is forced to the conclusion that it must surprise the Almighty Himself that so much good comes out of Nazareth. With fools and children we seem to be the beneficiaries of a special and beneficent providence.

THE TRIBUNE has not been able to commend Governor Savage very often—not as frequently as it would like to have done so—but his recent circumscription of the "liberty of the press" affords us an opportunity. Principals and employers generally are constantly being humiliated by too garrulous deputies, clerks and employees, who seem unmindful and thoughtless, who fail to appreciate the fact that the business—public or private—of their superiors is not theirs to divulge without authority, but on the other hand should be kept conscientiously inviolate. Men in public places have this to contend with in a most disagreeable measure, and THE TRIBUNE considers that Governor Savage is strictly within his prerogative and that his order is a proper self-preservative. The motto of a recent city superintendent of McCook schools was, "M. Y. O. B." which being interpreted is, "Mind Your Own Business." We suggest this motto to the governor—and all others who may need it.

Verdi's Popular Il Trovatore.

Of Verdi's opera's none is more popular than Il Trovatore. The music is exquisitely beautiful, the story is intensely and thrillingly interesting. It may be called a romantic tragedy, for not only is there love-making, but there is sorrow as well. Notwithstanding our boasted practicality, we are a race of sentimentalists. We love the ideal. We are fond of the impossible hero. We sympathize with the fair maiden in distress. We rejoice at the downfall of the villain. We do not begrudge the tears that we shed, for a romance, to be complete, must stir every emotion.

Il Trovatore is a tale of revenge. The Duc di Luna had two sons. One day the nurse found an old gypsy leaning over the cradle of the younger. The servant aroused the household and the woman was quickly and violently expelled from the castle. The child, who had been healthy before, sickened, and his illness being ascribed to an evil charm exercised by this woman, she was, by order of the Duc, burned at the stake. As the flames leaped upward she called upon her daughter to avenge her death. The daughter stole the Duc's younger son. No trace of him was seen again, but the body of a child, found near the stake at which the sorceress had been burned, was supposed to be his. The father however, maintained that his son lived.

These events preceded the raising of the curtain upon the first act. The opera begins thirty years later, after the old Duc is dead, and his eldest son has succeeded to his father's titles and estates. The young Duc is a suitor for the hand of Countess Leonora, but she is in love with Manrico, an officer in the army arrayed against the Duc's forces, who, disguised as a troubadour, has sung beneath her window. The Duc and Manrico meet in Leonora's garden one night and fight a duel in which Manrico worsts his adversary.

Manrico, who has always lived in the mountains among the gypsies, believes himself to be the son of a gipsy woman, a member of the tribe. This woman tells him how her mother was burned at the stake by the order of the Duc's father, and how she, burdened with her own child, stole the young count, and as she thought, hurled him into the fire that had consumed her mother. Too late she discovered that it was her own child that she had destroyed. Manrico asks her if he is not her son. She assures him that he is and urges him to avenge the wrong that was done her mother.

Manrico, learning that Leonora, in reliance upon a rumor that he had been slain on the field of battle, is about to enter a convent, hastens to prevent the step and arrives in time to save her from the Duc, who is about to carry her off by force. Manrico conducts Leonora to a neighboring fortress, which he has been detailed to defend.

In the meantime the gypsy, who is supposed to be Manrico's mother, has been captured. She is recognized, and upon the charge of having killed the young count the Duc orders her to be burned. When he hears that she is the mother of his hated rival, he decrees that the execution shall take place in the son's sight. Manrico, learning of the horrible fate that is about to overtake his mother, goes to her rescue. He is himself made prisoner and sentenced to death. The mother and son while awaiting the end, are confined in the same cell.

Leonora appeals to the Duc to spare her lover, but the Duc is obdurate and will not listen to her pleadings. She at length promises to become his wife if he will set Manrico free. To this the Duc readily assents, and Leonora is permitted to see Manrico for the last time. Just before entering the cell she takes a slow poison which she has concealed in her ring.

Manrico welcomes her rapturously, but when he is informed of her compact with the Duc, he indignantly accuses her of being unfaithful to him, and scorns his liberty purchased at such a price. Sooner than she had expected, the poison begins to take effect. Manrico then knows the extent of her sacrifice. As she expires in his arms the Duc enters the dungeon. Realizing what has occurred, he orders Manrico to be taken away and immediately beheaded, and he drags the gypsy woman to the window to witness the execution. When the deed is done, she tells the Duc that he has killed his brother, and dies, exulting in her revenge. The scene shifts rapidly. In the halls of the Duc's palace, in Leonora's garden, in the gypsies' stronghold, among the ruins of an ancient abbey, in the peaceful enclosure of the convent, in the camp of the royalist soldiers, before the ivy-covered walls of the prison, and in the gloomy dungeon, the story is unfolded. Among the notable songs of the opera are the one in which Leonora tells of her love for the Troubadour, the anvil chorus in the third act, which modern ingenuity in the use of electricity has made splendidly effective, the soldiers' chorus in the fourth act, and perhaps most beautiful of all, the duet between Leonora and Manrico, in the first scene of the sixth act.

A strange old story,—at first thought unlike anything that comes within the experience of the living. Yet not so different either, for human nature is the same as it has always been. The drama is enacted every day, but on a different stage each time, and with different actors. Men are moved by the same passions, today, that animated them in the days of chivalry and knighthood. The receding years burn incense, through which we dimly view the events of the past as through a veil that hides what is hideous and ugly, but reveals the good, the pure, the true.

Question Answered.

Yes, August Flower still has the largest sale of any medicine in the civilized world. Your mothers and grandmothers never thought of using anything else for indigestion or biliousness. Doctors were scarce and they seldom heard of appendicitis, nervous prostration or heart failure, etc. They used August Flower to clean out the system and stop fermentation of undigested food, regulate the action of the liver, stimulate the nervous and organic action of the system, and that is all they took when feeling dull and bad with headaches and other aches. You only need a few doses of Green's August Flower, in liquid form, to make you satisfied there is nothing serious the matter with you. Get Green's Prize Almanac.

Stop the Blight

It is a sad thing to see fine fruit trees spoiled by the blight. You can always tell them from the rest. They never do well afterwards but stay small and tickly.

It is worse to see a blight strike children. Good health is the natural right of children. But some of them don't get their rights. While the rest grow big and strong one stays small and weak.

Scott's Emulsion can stop that blight. There is no reason why such a child should stay small. Scott's Emulsion is a medicine with lots of strength in it—the kind of strength that makes things grow.

Scott's Emulsion makes children grow, makes them cat, makes them sleep, makes them play. Give the weak child a chance. Scott's Emulsion will make it catch up with the rest.

Death Stops Prosecution.

DENVER, Feb. 21.—(Special Telegram.) Because of the death of his former wife, Naomi S. Evans, Evan L. Evans will not have to appear in Magistrate Hyne's court, tomorrow, to answer to a charge of bigamy brought by her, last week. Mrs. Evans died at her home, 2420 Sixteenth street, Wednesday. Her end was hastened, it is believed, by the nervous and mental strain of her domestic troubles. She was 64 years old, just four years the senior of her husband.

Early last week, Mrs. Evans swore out a warrant in Judge Hyne's court charging Evans with bigamy. When he was arrested at the lumber yards of McPhee & McGinnity, where he is employed, he told the officer he had secured a divorce from his former wife in Hayes Center, Neb., several years ago, and produced the document in court a few days later.

Mrs. Evans testified that she had never been served with a notice of the suit and that if her husband had a divorce he secured it by fraudulent means. The case was continued until today. Mr. Evans married his second wife at Hayes Center, December 1, 1900. He married Naomi Evans in 1893.

Parson Uzzell's Reception.

Parson Uzzell had 125 couples at his reunion of people he had married, last night, at the people's tabernacle. They had a good time and patronized the refreshment tables liberally to aid the tabernacle. The couples the parson had married wore small red ribbon bows.

The parson remarried Mr. and Mrs. Richard Huerdine, a couple who had not been well married the first time. They were married at Orleans, Neb., in 1899, and got a divorce in Denver a couple of years ago. Last night they decided to be remarried, and the parson thinks it will stick this time.—Denver Times.

If a Woman

wants to put out a fire she doesn't heap on oil and wood. She throws on water, knowing that water quenches fire. When a woman wants to get well from disease peculiar to her sex, she should not add fuel to the fire, already burning her life away. She should not take worthless drugs and poisons composed of harmful narcotics and opiates. They do not check the disease—they do not cure it—they simply add fuel to the fire.

Bradfield's Female Regulator should be taken by every woman or girl who has the slightest suspicion of any of the ailments which afflict women. They will simply be wasting time until they take it. The Regulator is a purifying, strengthening, and health-giving tonic, which gets at the roots of the disease and cures the cause. It does not eradicate the pain, it eradicates it. It stops falling of the womb, leucorrhoea, inflammation and periodical suffering, irregular, drabby or painful menstruation; and by doing all this drives away the hundred and one aches and pains which drain health and beauty, happiness and good temper from many a woman's life. It is the one remedy above all others which every woman should know about and use.
