On Christmas day, Uncle Billy's family were all at the old homestead, except Ella, who has lived in Los Angeles, California, for eight years. Gertie, who lives near, and Edith of Oklahoma were present.
 On the day before Christmas as Uncle Billy was returning from McCook he got cold and in jumping out of the wagon to run and warm up, his foot caught in a rope and he pitched out and fell to the ground, alighting on his shoulders, and a big washing machine fell on his breast; and he was as you might say a considerably "packed;" altho' not a bone in his body was cracked. 'Twas great to see him eat goodies from platter and cup, 'til it did look as if he would never fill up, for he was as active as any old clown, 'til I thought 'pon my soul, he was hollow clear down.
