The Fatal Fifth Wreck.

The following account of last Saturday night's wreck a short distance west of Akron, is taken from the Denver Times' special correspondence from Akron, February 27th:

Akron, Colo., Feb. 27 .- "We, the jury, find that the deceased, Joseph J. Slaby, came to his death on February 25, 1905, in a railroad wreck about one and onehalf miles west of Akron, on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy railroad, the same being caused by the negligence of the said company.'

Engineer J. J. Slaby of Denver was killed in a wreck about a mile west of Akron, late Saturday night. Slaby was on the front engine of a double-header, going east, when suddenly and without warning his head brakeman, F. B. Lewis, noticed an engine backing down toward them. He immediately warned the engineer and fireman, W. R. McFarlane, and the latter jumped. So did Lewis. Both were uninjured.

Slaby, faithful to his duties, waited long enough to apply the air. This proved fatal. The runaway engine crashed into him just as he jumped and a rail struck him on the chest, at the junction of the collar bone with the sternum, fracturing both clavicles, three ribs on each side and the upper bone of the sternum, puncturing his lungs.

The runaway engine had been standing on the track some six hours, apparently blocked, but in some manner, possibly having a leaky throttle, the engine accumulated steam enough in the cylinders to start itself. It travelled over a mile, crashed into the double-header with sufficient force to derail both engines of the double-header, and then, by force of the jar, returned to Akron, where it was in the city, first of the week, and will preparing to extend its special long disson whomsoever shall cause or suffer

Joseph J. Slaby was born in Iowa City, Iowa, 39 years ago. The first twenty years of his life were spent in the little town working on his father's farm. In 1885 he came west and began railroading. He settled in Red Cloud, Neb., and nineteen years ago went into the employ of the Burlington. He had been with that road ever since.

P. E. O. Japanese Tea.

The social meeting of the P. E. O., assisted in the clever discharge of her were continued for various reasons: duties as hostess by Mrs. Joseph G. Schobel and Miss Carrie Budlong.

· Although only members of the society participated, invitations were issued. The affair being a Japanese tea the invitations were written in Japanese and were intended as souvenirs of the occasion. The guests were gowned in kimonos and wore sashes, with diminutive fans as coiffure ornaments,—the characteris tic raiment of the almond-eyed daughters of Nippon.

Miss Budlong met the guests and received them with all the oriental elaboration of posture, salaam, obeisance etc., directing them on in a Nipponese rhyme to Mrs. Schobel, where the reception was similar but less elaborate, and the guests were then ushered into the presence of the hostess.

The decorations embraced a profusion of images, parasols, fans, lanterns and Japanese draperies. Cushions supplanted chairs, the guests sitting on the floor in true oriental fashion.

Miss Budlong served inimitably in the tea-drinking contest in which Miss Mabel Wilcox won the honors, a Jap anese vase, for maintaining the completest external composure as Miss Budlong unfolded her store of Japanese
