Seven Ages of the Nose.

THE nose has seven ages. First, it leads its owner straight where pies and cookies, good and hot, lie fragrant on the plate. Then, second age, it loves a smell. Perhaps of all the best—The sawdust of the circus ring beats Araby the best. Third age, it sniffs with great delight from night till dewy morn. The perfume of a faded rose. A certain girl has worn. Next age, it goes into the wars. Where falls the battle stroke, and in its nostrils linger long the powder and the smoke. Fifth age, its happy hours are spent in speeding past the scene, while floats on the surrounding air the scent of gasoline. Sixth age, it finds a pleasure great. A joy vouchsafed to few. The faint aroma breathing forth from bank notes crisp and new. Then seventh age, when crowding years all other aims debar, in blissful and uplifted ease, it sniffs a good cigar. —McLanburgh Wilson in Lippincott's Magazine.

Not the Same.

"Have the Newriches acquired much bric-a-brac?"
"I believe they have a good many family jars."—Philadelphia Press.

Force of Habit.
"Oh, dear," complained the young mamma, "I do wish Dr. Squillington's wife wouldn't come here any more. She runs in a dozen times a day to play with the baby, and she always begins by tossing it up in the air and jouncing it around in a way that makes me so nervous I can hardly stand it. I should think she would know better than to treat a child in that way."
"I suppose," replied the little one's father, "that it's simply a case of the force of habit. She's probably carrying out her husband's usual instructions to shake well before using."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Willing to Settle.
"Do you seriously mean, madam," asked the claim agent, "that you are going to sue the company for $100,000 damages because you were slightly injured in an unavoidable train wreck?"
"I certainly do."
"That is preposterous. I am authorized to settle with you, madam, for $1,000. We will never pay a cent more."
"Well, then," she rejoined, with a sigh of resignation, "I suppose I'll have to compromise on $50,000."—Chicago Tribune.

The Countersign Was Safe.
Lieutenant Colonel Thurston when guard inspector at the New York camp at Peekskill approached one night a German sentry, who simply looked at him and marched on.
"Well?" inquired the colonel, intending to remind the man of his duty.
"Vell, vell! Vot iss it?"
"Don't you want the countersign?"
"No; dot's all right. Dat feller in der guard's tent give it to me. I got it."—Army and Navy Life.

Her Awful Sin.
"Sometimes," she whispered as she snuggled a little closer to him, "I am almost afraid that I am not worthy of you."
"Why, darling," he asked, "should you ever have such a thought as that?"
"Well, I—I once almost made up my mind to have my hair bleached."—Detroit Free Press.

The Source.
Mrs. Slimson—Willie, I don't see where you learned to swear so dreadfully.
Willie—You would, mother, if you had been out in the auto with paw as much as I have.—New York Life.

Of Another Kind.

"I wonder where that dog is goin'?"
"I guess he's goin' to der tailor's to have his pants pressed."—New York World.

Friendly Advice.
Fweddy—I've got to woppose to Miss Oldenrich this evening. How do you advise me—aw—to go about it?
Cholly—Take an anaesthetic.—Town Topics.
