

Born in Red Willow County.

One of the latest of Omaha young men to enter the ministry after several years' activity in the various schools, colleges and universities from which he graduated is Bevo Z. Stambaugh, the son of Rev. W. D. Stambaugh, pastor of Dietz Memorial Methodist church. The younger Stambaugh has just been given a license to preach and assigned to the charge at Palmer, Neb., where he expects to remain for a period of two years, when he will enter the Boston Theological seminary.

Mr. Stambaugh was born in Red Willow county, Nebraska, May 23, 1888. He passed through the public schools, taking the last two years of his high school work in South Omaha, serving as literary editor one year and as editor-in-chief of the Tooter, the South Omaha high school paper, in his graduating year. From there he entered the Nebraska Wesleyan university, from which he received his diploma last Tuesday, giving him his A. B. degree.

The faculty of the institution say that Mr. Stambaugh has given to the institution in his work as editor of the Coyote the best and most artistic issue of the year-book ever finished in the history of the university.

Prof. Alabaster, professor of Latin and Greek, says of him that he is the best type of the old school art in high literary taste and sensibility of any student he has had the privilege of tutoring.—Omaha World Herald.

National Hoiness Association.

The National Hoiness Association unite with the Nebraska State this year in holding a great camp meeting. Four of the ablest men in the National Association have been secured as workers, viz: Dr. C. J. Fowler, Dr. B. Carradine, Rev. C. W. Ruth and Rev. C. F. Weigle. The meeting will be held on the State Fair Ground which is high and well drained and there will be no danger of being flooded in case of wet weather. Excellent accomodation will be provided for all who will attend, and the expenses will be brought down to the minimum. Preparations are being made for the greatest meeting in the history of the Association. The buildings of the State Fair Ground afford such excellent shelter, it is believed not many tents will be used but those who wish tents can procure them by ordering them ahead and at the old prices.

This meeting is inter-denominational and people from all the churches are invited to attend and feel it is their meeting.

A great spiritual feast is expected—you can't afford to miss it.

Remember the time—July 15 to 16—and place—State Fair Ground, Lincoln, Neb.

Write for circulars giving full particulars to W. H. Prescott, Sec'y, 1219 O St., Lincoln, Nebraska.

For Nearly Forty Years.
While The State Journal has been one of the leading papers of the state for nearly forty years, yet its most rapid growth has been recently, during which time it has come to be recognized by many as Nebraska's greatest paper, making most of those things that interest Nebraskans most, in this way creating a place for itself in the daily life of thousands of Nebraska homes. The country press generally could be quoted as saying that the editorial page of The Journal is exceptionally strong and fearlessly independent. It is also unusually bright, Bixby himself being a gem. No writer in Nebraska ever had the warm admiration of so many people as Bixby. His column in The Journal is alone worth the price of the paper. His wholesome philosophy will put sunshine and cheer into the most chronic grouch. The state university, the other public institutions at Lincoln make The Journal peculiarly a paper for state people. It is clean, excluding all liquor and impure medical advertising. Its sporting department is clever and there with the goods. More money is spent for state telegraphic news than by other state dailies. If you want to know what is happening in Nebraska, as well as the whole world, The Lincoln Journal is the paper for you. Why not give it this trial subscription?

Pen Sketches Of H. H. Rogers.

Some of the Great Oil Man's Peculiarities, His Kindly Heart and His Capacity For Satire and Vindictiveness. A Remarkable Man.

THE late Henry H. Rogers, vice president of the Standard Oil company, has been described as "genial, approachable, talkative and altogether attractive; then sarcastic, bitter and jeering; cordial in one breath, chilly the next; kindly and almost lovable, then cold and harsh. His expression could transform itself while he blinked his eyes. His voice could travel through the scale of vindictiveness, indifference, politeness, affability and friendliness in a single instant."

One of the intimates of Mr. Rogers was Mark Twain, who in private life is Samuel L. Clemens. When the famous humorist became a bankrupt through the failure of the publishing firm with which he was identified the oil man took charge of his shattered fortunes and restored him to a position of independence. He never seemed happier than when in Mr. Clemens' society and often took him with him on yachting cruises. The great writer heard of Mr. Rogers' death on his way to New York, where he had expected to meet his friend and enjoy the day with him. He exclaimed: "This is terrible, terrible! I can't talk about it. I am inexplicably shocked and grieved."

Mr. Rogers' activities in connection with the Virginia railway commonly known as Rogers' tidewater road had been held responsible for much of his ill health in recent years. Practically alone he had carried through this project, his last great industrial venture. There have been many reports that he lost millions in the enterprise.

It was said by his associates that he had done little or no speculating in Wall street since 1906 and that all his energy beyond what was required in the oversight of the Standard Oil company had been concentrated on the tidewater road's completion. Referring to the present status of his fortune, a man in a position to know the facts said that Mr. Rogers held at the time of his death about 20,000 shares of Standard Oil stock, worth $11,000,000.

H. H. ROGERS AND HOW HE STARTED IN BUSINESS.

The estimates of his losses in late years ran as high as $50,000,000. When the new road was opened formally in April the city of Norfolk exerted itself to honor the builder. Mr. Rogers took a party to Norfolk for the opening. He appeared stronger than for many months and in great spirits over the railway achievement. At a dinner in his honor he heard Mark Twain praise him as a benefactor. The author told how the oil man helped Miss Helen Keller, paying for her education for a quarter of a century.

It is related of Mr. Rogers' experience as a member of the firm of Charles Pratt & Co. that the men in the different Pratt factories came to know his humors by the twist of his mustache. "Both ends up" they used to say in advising each other that he was in a mood to make trouble for somebody. "One end up" meant a fairly even temper. "Both ends down" signified that the day would pass pleasantly for the employees.

The story of how Mr. Rogers gave his home town of Fairhaven, Mass., its sewer system is identical with the story of how he gave away one of his daughters in marriage. Having made up his mind that if the town could not afford the piping of its sewage into the bay he would himself meet the expense, Mr. Rogers determined that he would choose the very best sewage system obtainable. He decided on a kind of sewer built by an English company whose representative was Urban H. Broughton. He accordingly invited Mr. Broughton to Fairhaven and made him a guest at his home while the two inspected the town to determine where the pipes should be laid. At the Rogers home Mr. Broughton met the financier's daughter, Cara, and as the trenches deepened his love for the heiress also grew deeper, with the result that the engagement was announced before the sewers were finished.

One of Edison's Jokes.

Edison was always a great joke player. Those ones he seemed to enjoy most were like the one he worked on one of the laziest operators in the office where he was once employed. One night, when this fellow thought his day's work was over and was getting ready to go home, Edison slipped around to the office switchboard, made a connection with the lazy fellow's telegraph key, called him down to the table and, supplied with an old newspaper, proceeded to send Mr. Lazy a long lot of presumably Associated Press stuff from New York. Edison was a lightning sender (as well as receiver) from almost the beginning of his career, and the way he made that fellow work for two solid hours was a joy. After wearing him completely out, making him receive and copy the equivalent of about three or four newspaper columns, Edison suddenly came from behind the switchboard, exposed the joke to the poor fellow and wound up by pelting him on the nose with the newspaper he had been sending from.—Pearson's.

Scolded and Comforted.

At a lunch given in his honor Sven Hedin read an amusing letter written to him by Alfred Nobel at a time when Hedin was still a student, but already filled with a longing to explore unknown Asia. He applied to the government for funds, but the answer was so slow in coming that he wrote to Nobel, who promptly replied: "I take no interest in these geographical exploration trips. In fact, I regard them as an anachronism. Men communicate with each other today from one end of the earth to the other by means of telegraph and post. There are in Asia, too, explorers and savants who are surely better qualified than you, sir, to study and describe their native country. I therefore believe that you could make better use of your ambitions impulses than by undertaking trips to Asia. But in order that you may see that I do not always act as I think I send you a sum which may serve as the best confutation of my own convictions."

Squandering Ability.

Doing the lower when the higher is possible constitutes one of the greatest tragedies of human life. The squandering of money seems a wicked thing when we think of the good that might be done with it. But what about the wicked waste of ability, the deliberate throwing away of 50, 75, perhaps 90 per cent of one's success possibly just because he never trained himself to use it, to grasp it with such vigor and power that he can fling his life into his career with its maximum effectiveness? Most people take hold of life with the tips of their fingers. They never get hold of the life proposition with that grip and tenacity of purpose and vigor of determination which do things worth while. They just hang on the outskirts of things, playing upon the surface of their possibilities without ever getting down into the marrow of their being, where efficiency and power dwell.—Orison Swett Marden in Success Magazine.

Exclusive Perfumes.

The late Dr. Andrew Wynter in a charming article on perfumes suggested the desirability of every lady having her own special and self prepared perfume. The custom, however, would have its disadvantages. More than one sensational story might be mentioned wherein the heroine or villain was saved or unmasked, as the case might be, by the recognition of a distinctive scent. In "Diplomacy" the denouement is effected by the telltale perfume of the adventuress being detected in the dispatch box she had rifled. As a matter of history, the assassins of the oriental sovereign Yezidjird were discovered by one of them smelling of the perfume with which the robes of the murdered king had been redolent.—London Globe.

Hops.

"Have you seen the account in this morning's papers about Dr. Cutting having brought a dead man back to life?"
"No. Did he do that?"
"Yes. It was a wonderful demonstration of his skill."
"Well, I shall be more hopeful now than I have been for some time. If he can bring the dead back to life he may be able to bring back the book he borrowed from me about two years ago."
—Chicago Record-Herald.

Begging in Paris.

Giving up his profession, a Paris beggar offers his "pitch" for sale. His advertisement reads: "For sale, present holder retiring to the country, good situation for one legged man; neighborhood of the Etoile; hours of work, 2 p. m. to 7 p. m.; receipts, $2.40 to $3.15; regular passersby, children and strangers; or any infirmity would suit."

A Feminine Reason.

"But," asked the first co-ed, "why did you elect to take up the study of German instead of French?"
"Oh," replied the other, "the German professor was so awfully handsome, you know."
—Catholic Standard and Times.

The Complaint.

A magistrate looked at a disreputable specimen of manhood in the dock and turned to the policeman. "Officer," he asked, "what is the complaint?"
"Rheumatiz, y'r honor!" exclaimed the prisoner, answering for himself.

A Test Question.

Newed—I tell you, old chap, I'm another man since I was married. Singleton—So? Does your wife love you as much as the man she married?—Exchange.

MILITARY SYSTEM.

The Way Germany Handles Her Reserves in Case of War.

Nobody who has visited Germany can fail to have been struck by the large official signboards at the entry to each town or village. These contain full information as to exactly which official in the community to apply to should the magic word "mobilize" be spoken.

Wherever the German reservist may chance to be when the order to mobilize is given—assuming, of course, that he is not out of the country—he has only got to ask the first inhabitant or walk to the end of the village and look at the directions on the signboard to find out his own particular place in the military scheme. He will see that he must go to Herr Schmidt, at 40 Schutzen street. Herr Schmidt will tell him exactly in which town he has to go in order to rejoin his own unit and, what is still more important, will give him the money and the railway pass to take him there.

Arrived at his destination, he will find his uniform, arms and accouterments piled neatly in a heap, with a label bearing his name and regimental number on the top of the heap. He has only to put it on and take his place among the comrades with whom he did his military service some years ago.

This destination was arranged upon many years back, and the exact time schedule for marching and railway journeys was compiled long since.—Pearson's Weekly.

THE BASQUES.

An Interesting People Who Are a Puzzle Among Nations.

The Basque provinces lie in the north of Spain, and, although for centuries students have tried to trace the real origin of the people and find a key to their language, they have failed to do so.

All other known tongues spoken by the sons of men have been shown to possess a common origin, traceable to the Arabic and Semitic. But the Basque language has entirely resisted the philologist. In some aspects the vernacular shows traces of a Chinese admixture. In others it is clear that North American Indian terms are native to it. It also shows traces of barbaric languages spoken on the east coast of Africa.

The people themselves bear physiological traits found in those who speak the said tongues. The native name of Basqueland is Eskuara, and their motto is "Iruakbat," or "Three in One." Nor is their political structure anything like that of any known political body, though they belong, of course, to Spain. Each Basque province is governed by a parliament composed of representatives—selected partly by election, partly by lot—among the householders of each country parish or town. Their laws are essentially peculiar to themselves and are conceived on no known code either of ancient or medieval times. They are a puzzle among nations and number half a million all told.—New York World.

Paper Which Is Waterproof.

In Japan there is a paper made which is impervious to water, being made of bamboo fibers and eucalyptus mixed with the fibers of the gampi and some other shrubs. The fibers are first torn apart, made dry, cleaned and scraped, boiled in a weak lye and thoroughly washed in water, after which they are beaten and then mixed with certain roots made into a viscous state. A solution containing resin, caoutchouc and camphor is also added. A sort of pulp is thus formed and then made into sheets, which are run through a calendaring machine heated to various temperatures. The result is that a paper is produced which is exceedingly tough, light and which may be washed. The Japanese use it for leather imitations and India rubber.—Pathfinder.

Northern Australia.

Australia's huge northern territory has a tropical, almost an equatorial, climate, and the heat is very enervating to Europeans. Its capital, Palmerston, contains more Chinese than Caucasians. The former are the ruling race and the employers; the white are the servile and the employed. Large herds of buffaloes roam about the silent plains of this enormous territory, which would be a sportsman's paradise but for the wild natives, who are exceptionally fierce and treacherous and have killed a number of the hunters who came to hunt the buffaloes.

His Marathon Record.

"Colonel," asked the beautiful girl, "did you ever ride a horse ninety miles in three days?"
"No," replied the veteran of two wars, "but I once ran twenty miles in about thirty minutes, which, I think, was going some, considering the fact that the underbrush was thick, and I was in so much of a hurry that I forgot to throw away a knapsack that weighed nearly fifty pounds."
—Chicago Record-Herald.

Counts Up.

"My dear," he said in a mildly reproachful tone, "I have no doubt at all that you are a good bargain hunter and that you always get really excellent bargains, but you get too many of them."
—Chicago Post.

No Reason.

She—I think you might stop smoking when you heard me say I don't like it. He—That's no reason. I heard you say you didn't like to be kissed.—Boston Transcript.
