BURNING THE DEAD.

A Custom That Can Be Traced Back to the Earliest Ages. Cremation has been practiced by most of the nations of the earth from the earliest ages, and, although in pagan countries it may have taken the form of fire worshiping, there can be no doubt that its adoption by the ancients was for the most part prompted by other than religious reasons Greeks ascribe its introduction to Hercules, who, having sworn to transmit the body of Argus to his father. thought this the most convenient way of fulfilling his promise. According to long before the Trojan war, but the Hundred Dollars ($100.00) each. earliest record of it is among the Scythians, who inhabited the vast region known under the name of Tar tary. Slender accounts handed down concerning the manners of some of the ancient natives of Hindustan also al lude to the custom. The idea of purification by fire was in all ages univer lieved that the body was unclean after proxy. the departure of the soul, and it was therefore deemed necessary that it should be purified by fire. The Last of the Ruffs.

In 1762 the rage for ruffs, such as are seen on many monumental effigies, began to decline. A writer in the London Chronicle of that year says of gentlemen's dress, "Their cuffs entirely cover their wrists, and only the edges of their rufiles are to be seen." It is said that a distaste for ruffs was first created so far back as 1613, when a woman named Turner wore them on her trial for the murder by poison of Sir Thomas Overbury, The French British fashion, and the picturesque generally to round hats and small cuffs. The period of their final disuse cannot be easily determined, as men of old fashioned or eccentric habits have worn ruffled shirt fronts within quite recent memory similar to those which, according to Planche's "History of British Costume," originated in the seventeenth century.

The Conductor's Baton.

According to the investigations of a Frenchman, the credit of inventing the conductor's baton belongs to Lully, the composer, who eventually had cause to regret his invention. Before he adopted the baton conductors were in the habit of pounding on the floor with their feet or compping their hands to mark the time. Leffy found it wearisome to keep his foot constantly in motion and so used a stick to sarike the floor and beat tisha. The used a pub six feet long. One day he brought down the pole with such forme that i struck his foot and ande a dog wound. He puid no attention to the matter. The wound grow worse and ultimately caused his death. Atter his time conductors tried more and more to improve the beton, and it was
