THEIR ARGUMENT

Hortense gave the steering bar of her electric brougham a vicious little jerk.

"I think you are particularly silly to-day, Billy," she declared. "I wouldn't have agreed to let you ride into town with me this morning if I had known you were going to talk such nonsense."

"Let me remonstrate with you for trying to take these corners on the fly," meekly retorted Billy. "You have a habit of confusing your electric with an aviation machine. However, to come back to the subject at issue, I have never before talked quite so well or so seriously in my life as I did just a moment ago. As I have covered the same ground on numerous occasions before, perhaps it is just as well to let me down at the next suburban station."

"Oh, no," said Hortense, nonchalantly. "It's really a very warm day to ride in on the train, and besides you missed the last express while you waited for me to have the electric brought around. I hate to take the run in alone, anyway. You know, Billy, it isn't that I don't care for you a lot—a big lot. I just can't think of being engaged to any one person. There are others who need my friendship and advice."

"I see," remarked Billy dryly. "You might manage a little arrangement whereby you could be engaged to Tom on Wednesdays, to Jim on Fridays and to me on Sundays."

"Don't be flippant," commanded Hortense, turning a corner at an angle that caused Billy's hair to stand on end.

"You see," she went on, pensively. "I really feel that I owe something to those who are dependent upon me for my advice and inspiration. Tom has just got into corporation law and he says that I have helped untangle some of the knottiest cases he has had. Not directly, of course, but just by my interest and encouragement. If I were to become engaged to you, Billy, I could no longer help Tom and keep a record of his failures and successes. When he wins a case, I use a red pencil to make a record with and when he loses a case I use a black one."

"How interesting," commented Billy. "From what I've seen and heard I infer that your red pencil had not been worn down very much."

"I hate jealous men," remarked Hortense. "Besides, it isn't just Tom there is Kenneth, too. He is up here doing engineering work and every time he loses his temper and tries to run the manager he telephones me and I think up a nice little sisterly talk to give him when he comes down. He says he benefits wonderfully by my calm, even disposition and cool, logical views. He is a southerner, you know, and they have such tempers. Don't you think so?"

"I should say they do," agreed Billy. "In fact, temper takes the place of brains with some men that I could mention."

"I have near me now a most striking example of that sort," retorted Hortense, showing her dimples. "There's another thing, Billy. If I did become engaged to you I should be dreadfully exacting. I should want you to give up your clubs, and I should run away every time you talked about baseball and prize fights. You know, I hate all those things. You would have to talk about grand opera and higher education and—domestic science and all sorts of things that you don't know anything about. You would hate me in a week, wouldn't you, Billy?"

"I'll take chances on that any time," returned Billy. "I can buy the librettos and read up on grand opera and I have a college degree tucked away somewhere that I could haul out. Then I can cook and sew on buttons really remarkably well. In fact, coming down to a specific comparison of tastes and ideas in common, I appear to be the one man in the world for you. You can see that yourselves."

"We're almost in town," said Hortense, hurriedly. "Would you get white poplin or pique to pipe a lavender dress?"

"Why, if I were the sweetest little girl in the world—which you are—I should turn down this next street and go to a certain jewelry shop and let a certain man have the third finger of the left hand sized for—"

"But I have loads of shopping to do," remonstrated Hortense with very red cheeks, "and you are late for the office, and, anyhow, it is all very silly, and I know you will be sorry and regret it."

"You have passed by the street I asked you to turn down," remarked Billy in a quietly restrained voice.

Then, being a tactful man, he was silent as Hortense's little hand on the steering bar of the electric slowly turned the machine around.

Curious Seismic Phenomenon.
According to a Seville report, a curious seismic phenomenon was recently observed near Cantillana at a place called Mesa Redonda. From ten in the morning until noon stones lying on the ground at certain spots within a circumference of over 500 yards were torn from the ground and hurled into the air, and at the same time subterranean noises were heard. Traces of an extinct volcano are visible at the spot, and it is believed that a new crater is being formed.

"WHITE FACE" ROGERS.

The Breeder of Famous Herefords, Nominee for County Commissioner.

Walter N. Rogers, owner of the famous Shadland herd of "White Faces," has been very modest in his candidacy for the office of county commissioner; but as the campaign is about to close takes this opportunity of placing his name before the voters of Red Willow county, and asking their support of him at the polls, next Tuesday.

He has lived in Red Willow county for the past eighteen years, during which time he has placed on the market some of the most famous individuals in the Hereford strain of animals produced in America—in fact perhaps no man in the county has brought Red Willow county before the public in so prominent a light—in so distinguished a manner—as has Mr. Rogers.

Mr. Rogers has proven himself a business man of quick perception and much good common sense—a careful, conservative man in private business matters, he is especially well equipped to transact the business of the people of the county with due care and economy—without regard to neighborhoods, cliques, or ought else but the best interests of the whole people.

Mr. Rogers has been especially active in the matter of good road building, as witnesseth the improvement of the road leading east from the east bridge near this city.

So, Mr. Rogers makes his appeal to the voters of the county on the grounds of being a large and interested taxpayer in the county, being a resident of many years, having large interests in the county, and having a real and earnest desire and determination to render the county the very best service possible.

He submits his qualifications and intentions for the consideration of the people of the county, hoping to receive their active support at the polls on next Tuesday, November 8th.

It's worth $8.00 to you to read our advertisement in this paper, so don't overlook it.
