CHAPTER SIX

The two men walked to the river's edge; Miss Fogg was content to sit and watch the sunset, but Ewen McCallum was determined to get on with his instructions. He told the girl how to find the treasure, and what to do with it when she found it.

"Yes, Mr. McCallum," Miss Fogg repeated, "I understand you.

"Good," he said. "Now, you must have the courage to do it.

Miss Fogg agreed, and the two men parted. Later, as Miss Fogg was walking along the beach, she met Ewen McCallum again. He asked her of the treasure, and she told him the story of how she found it.

"Miss Fogg," he said, "I am proud of you.

"Thank you, Mr. McCallum," she replied. "I will do my best to be worthy of your trust.

"You are worthy," he replied, "but you must not tell anyone of what you have found.

Miss Fogg agreed, and the two men parted again. Later, as she walked along the beach, she met Ewen McCallum one more time. He asked her of the treasure, and she told him the story of how she found it.

"Miss Fogg," he said, "I am proud of you.

"Thank you, Mr. McCallum," she replied. "I will do my best to be worthy of your trust.

CHAPTER XVII

This chapter begins with a scene from the previous chapter, where Miss Fogg was seen walking along the beach. She met Ewen McCallum one last time, and he asked her of the treasure, and she told him the story of how she found it.

"Miss Fogg," he said, "I am proud of you.

"Thank you, Mr. McCallum," she replied. "I will do my best to be worthy of your trust.

And with that, Miss Fogg turned and walked away, leaving Ewen McCallum behind her.
