JAMES NICHOLS, DAVID WHITLA, Secretary. Chairman.

Mr. Bryan, in his criticisms of Presiright. While Mr. McKinley has con- quarter that is not to his credit. ducted the affairs of this country through one of the severest historical has made numerous mistakes and the question of what would have happened had he been president is pertinent.

Some Intemperate Temperance. Washington letter in the Chicago Journal: "Wine on the White House Table" is a phrase frequently seen in print lately. It appears in connection with resolutions and manifestoes denouncing the president's attitude-or supposed attitude-on the subject of the army canteen. Certain well meaning people have taken advantage of the presidential campaign to agitate in they have not hesitated to slander the chief executive.

The idea evidently intended to be conveyed by the various emanations and administration of national affairs, are fulminations of these anti-alcohol enthusiasts is that William McKinley is a plicant for work now where there wine bibber and an advocate by example and precept of the use of alcoholic beverages. It is said that he has wine on the White House table, and the phrase is dinned and reiterated until it has become tiresomely familiar. It has been found there is activity in the sales of made the text for sensational speech makings at supposedly religious assenblies, and a temperance organization in Indiana has started an endless chain of letters urging good people to indulge in a campaign of prayer against the election of McKinley and in favor of Bryan, on the theory that the almighty may thus be induced to avail himself of the agents which has not been revised opportunity to forward the cause of temperance.

this kind of attack. But it seems rather of the property listed. Every agent recurious that the most baseless and ports an increase, and one says that 17 malicious slander should be set affoat, offers of the list price have been re not by his political opponents, but by fused within the last 30 days. Rental people who are supposed to be inspired agents state that the demand for meby lofty and disinterested motives And dium size cottages and apartments it is even more remarkable that McKin. was never so large. Price can no figit is even more remarkable that McKinley of all men, and of all presidents, should be singled out for the ill will of satisfied. Rents have been advanced these particular reformers; for if they from 5 to 20 per cent on this class of had scanned the list of presidents from houses and the prospect for further Washington down in search of one who. advance is bright. in his daily life, both public and private, exemplified the principles for which they contend, no better could be found than the present occupant of the White is wine or any other intoxicant served on the White House table. On the occasion of formal banquets at which diplomats are entertained wine has been served just as napkins or finger bowls would be provided for guests accustomed to them.

In his character of host the president knows that it is his duty to consider the pleasure and comfort of those who accept his hospitality, rather than to at tempt to impose upon them any personal notions as to what it is proper to eat or drink

Even on the occasion of these formal banquets the president does not drink. He may go through the form of touching his lips to the glass, but it has been noted time and again by people who have been present at these affairs that the contents of his glass never lowered. It is not claimed that MoKinley is an advocate of the principles of total abstinence; he does not care for liquor, and, during all his long political career, has refrained from indulgence. He be lieves he is better without it. His health has always been of the best, and he frequently has said to his friends that he attributes the fact to temperate habits and a good conscience. He is a great believer in work, and when it comes to the "strenuous life" he can give Teddy Roosevelt post-graduate instruction.

Whatever he may be as a president or public man, Mr. McKinley in his home life is not only beyond criticism but he is beyond praise. His devotion to Mrs. In this department for many years, himself and wife, with this little las-McKinley, the tenderness and care which places her happiness even before today consists of 17 officers and 556 cars. Two little boys, the sons of comwhich places her happiness even before the weightiest affairs of the nation, are matters too sacred for the gaze of the public. Even though this little home has been in the White House its privacy has not been violated.

During other administrations there has been tittle-tattle and yellow journals have exploited the secrets of scullery and boudoir. But if any prying Tom has intruded himself into the McKinley household he has found his rebuke in what he saw, and has been discouraged from further effort in the same direction. Behind the folding doors which cut off the office from the living apartments. the president becomes the husband and the lover, his only thought being for the comfort and happiness of his invalid

Here are the few intimate friendsnot the politicians or officials with whom he has daily intercourse, and who are members of his executive and official family. The hospitality is unaffected, the amusements simple, and all is imbued with a spirit of harmony and peace.

The members of President McKinley's religious persuasion and the reformers of various stripes who are getting, if not seeking, a cheap notoriety by their willingness to stand sponsor for the most absurd slanders, are in a way to bring discredit on themselves and their cause by attacks upon the private chardent McKinley, insinuates that he could acter of Mr. McKinley. The whitest not make mistakes or do anything but light will disclose nothing in that

Then and Now.

One of the leading business men of epochs of the nation's life, Mr. Bryan Omaha says: "Our present business has employed his time in speaking and does not in any way resemble the business we did four years ago. We have more than doubled our business and it is on a more satisfactory basis all around. Our men are making better salaries and we are employing about twice as many as we had four years ago, and, as stated above, our business is on a more satisfactory basis than it has ever been. Under the circumstances, we would dislike very much to see any change in the administration, as we believe it to be to the interest of everyone to continue the present administration another term."

Another prominent man says: "Our business for the past year showed an favor of prohibition, and in doing so increase of about 25 per cent over 1896, and collections have not been so good since 1892 as they are now. Prospects ahead of us, with the right kind of an unusually bright. There is not one apwere five or even more in 1890."
