ATHLETIC DEPARTMENT
 POSTMORTEMS AND PROPHECIES.
 By H. I. Kyle.

We have been criticized, harshly, bitterly, cruelly, criticised for, and because of, the policy adopted by us in the editing of this department. We have heard it said, in our presence, while we were right there, and to our face, that certain things or statements had appeared in this column, entirely foreign to athletics, and pertaining, neither in form nor substance, in the slightest particular, of any of the qualities or characteristics of either post-mortems or prophecies. How very sad.

Consider the hook-worm victim,
 Who lies in the shade all day
 In lassitudinous leisure,
 And slumbers his life away.

Consider the lowly turnip
 That grows in the fertile soil,
 And passes its short existence,
 Devoid of a hint of toil.

Consider the caterpillar,
 That clings to the willow tree,
 Close to the heart of nature,
 With a life from labor, free.

Consider this "sporting writer,"
 Who uses his precious time,
 In seeking an inspiration,
 And putting it into rhyme.
