UNIVERSITIES NOT FOR RECRUITING ARMIES

Since certain undergraduates of Harvard University and of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology have taken steps to organize a gun corps to operate with the artillery division of a Massachusetts militia regiment, discussion at once has begun at Harvard as to the desirability of these institutions being committed in this way to militant national policies. A considerable body of opinion in the student ranks and in the faculty will be adverse to this move just at this time. The quasi-indorsement previously given by the university to the army's efforts to induce university and college men to enter the service, and recent pleas by military men addressed directly and verbally to the undergraduates, have run counter to the desires of this same group of non-militants, who look on a university as set apart for other uses than a recruiting ground.

This criticism is more freely voiced just now, because recent events have shown how superficial is the feeling of amity between scholars of eminence and much experience when they are forced to choose between nationalism and internationalism. It is argued, and with much force, that until adults that make up teaching faculties can show a higher stage of mastery of themselves as combatants, it is hardly timely for undergraduate students to become recruits for any form of physical combat.

The belief is general that, taking the university and colleges of the land as a group, they will count on the side of the "war against war" program, and not go with the "big army, big navy" champions. If, after a debate of this issue, undertaken on a national scale, a moderate program of a defensive sort is defined, probably neither men nor money will be lacking. But here again much depends on the outcome of the war, and of the congress of nations that will follow it. If military expansion follows, the educated man will have his share in making it effective. But all this may come to pass without any need arising for men now in universities or colleges to begin making paths between dormitories and armories and between classrooms and drill halls.—Christian Science Monitor.

"It is understood that twelve lots in the territory to be included in the enlarged campus of the State University have already been bought and paid for and that negotiations that may result in early transfers are in progress for other lots. The action taken by the board indicates that the one block where condemnation proceedings are authorized will be required first for building purposes.

Representatives of the citizens committee, interested in the purchase of the ground needed for campus extension, attended the meeting and conferred with the regents in the matter of property deals.

"A course of studies for the students of the college of agriculture, by which all students may secure their school work at the state farm, without coming to the campus was adopted. The agricultural practice group was enlarged to a four-year from two years.

"A report was received by the Lincoln Traction to offer eight to ten minute service from the city to the campus. New changes in rails and the like will be necessary and the board took the proposition under consideration.

"Regent W. G. Whitmore was elected president of the board.

"Regent Brown and Chancellor Avery were appointed a committee to visit the agricultural school at Curtis and report on the improvements to be made.

"The following standing committees were named:

"Executive: Whitmore, Lyford and Haller.

"Finance: Hall, Haller and Miller.

"Industrial Education: Brown, Hall and Whitmore.

"The budget for the summer session presented by Chancellor Avery was approved."

Alumni Home

There is a movement among the 3,000 Michigan Agricultural College alumni and former students for an alumni home to be erected at the college. The movement is growing fast and indications are that it will mature to such an extent that the building can be erected and dedicated without a cent's indebtedness. It is proposed to have the home as a general headquarters for visiting alumni where they may obtain board and room. The estimated cost is between $20,000 and $25,000.—Greek Exchange.

HUSKERS TAKE TWO

Free throws—Thelson 5, Hugg 1, Sweeney 3. Referee—Hyland.

The same teams met for a second battle, Saturday night, and although the Aggies put forth their best effort, they were simply unable to cope with their heavier and better trained adversaries. The game slowed down a trifle toward the close, when the visiting team lost all hope of victory, but was, nevertheless, interesting and full of brilliant flashes of play on the part of the Cornhuskers. Three different members of the Ames team were "laid out" during the encounter, but all very pluckily refused to retire. The game ended with a final score of 25 to 12 in the Cornhusker's favor.

Line-up for the second game:

Nebraska: Shields, McDonald, Arp, Morgan

Rutherford, Campbell, Sweeney (C.), Myers, Porterfield, Hugg, Boynton, Hawkins, Cramer. Goals—Hawkins 4, Hugg 3, Myers 2, Rutherford 2, Shields 1, Cramer 2, Porterfield 1, Sweeney 1, Morgan 1.

Free throws—Myers 1, Sweeney 1. Referee—Hyland.

Cramer, the left guard for the visitors, was easily their star. Playing from a guard position, he threw more goals than all the rest of his team together, and allowed his opponent but three goals in the two games. He was an accurate basket-shooter from all positions, and from any part of the floor. For the Nebraskans, Hugg and Shields shone out as the stars in the first game, while in the second Captain Hawkins was probably the particular star.
