"Study, and study hard. But never let the thought enter your mind that study alone will lead you to the heights of usefulness and success."—Grover Cleveland.

Many students make the mistake of thinking that a college education should result in the accumulation of a vast store of facts and that all their time should be spent in the gathering and absorbing of this material. There is another class who believe that a college education means four years of theatre parties, dances, midnight lunches and other recreations at father's expense, with just enough study to make the professors think they know something about the subject. Both classes are doing their parents, their friends, and themselves an injustice. Our studies should, of course, be the primary consideration while here, but we can learn much from a good theatre or a good sermon. We need the inspiration of music and should not fail to use every opportunity for cultivating an appreciation of the best music. We need to cultivate friendships through the medium of social functions. The college man who has no friends, even though he may earn a Phi Beta Kappa, is a failure. We study the languages and sciences and arts for years, but if we have not learned to know and appreciate and serve our fellow men we have not yet learned how best to live. The student needs a touch of the practical along with the theoretical. If anyone in the world should be open-minded surely the student should be. He needs to see the world from different angles and different points of view. He can only do this by a diversified experience and contact with the better things wherever they may be.

Texas Seniors Wear Toga

According to a recent issue of the Daily Texan, the senior girls will appear on the campus Tuesdays and Fridays attired in black three-cornered caps with frilling tassels and long flowing gowns peculiar to academic dignitaries. The men will wear wind-sor ties and swing short brown canes with sterling silver knobs. A vigilance committee composed of several members of the class has been appointed to see each member of the class and inquire if they have purchased and are wearing the requisite paraphernalia.
