FOR MORE SPIRIT

The University of Nebraska is not the only school that is working for more spirit among its students for the University of Wisconsin rooters are meeting on Randall Field every day this week for their "pep sessions" in order to have a powerful "Legion of Loyal Rooters" to aid their football squad at Urbana when they meet Illinois next Saturday.

It is only when we read the papers of the other schools that we realize that they also must exert themselves in every possible way in order to properly prepare for their opponents. Nebraska is able to develop as sincere a group of rooters as is any school in the country but its students are beginning to believe that all they are required to do is, "leave it to the team," which may some day prove to be false reasoning. The team needs our support and whenever a rally is called, be one of the many to respond—be a part of the unit, the student body, to work for the glory of old Nebraska. Were you on the athletic field during the open air rally? If not, why?

Have you noticed that a little authority seems to get the best of some of the embryo librarians?

THOSE ERRORS

Of course the articles on the "Special Train to Lawrence" and the "Plans for the Junior Play" in yesterday's paper were not properly set up and any reader who is at all able to use mental gymnastics knows how the error occurred.

FORUM

The one entrusted with the task of seeing that the columns of the Daily Nebraskan are filled every day with some sort of reading matter, feels that he made one of the richest finds in history when he discovered a bunch of Rhetoric V. themes on the subject, "Does the Daily Nebraskan Reflect Student Opinion?" These themes will be published as corrected by the theme reader and will be selected from those "agin" as well as those complimentary to the Nebraskan.

It is refreshing to hear first hand just what people think of the efforts put forth on the student daily and in publishing the theme below, the Nebraskan can't be accused of throwing a bouquet at itself, to say the least.

The following effusion is from the active mind of a sophomore girl, written in the winter of 1914:

Is the Nebraskan Representative of the Student Opinion?

I believe the Daily Nebraskan is representative of student opinion to some extent. For in reading over the items it is found that subjects are discussed and commented on which the organizations of the University have taken up. The Girls' club, societies and University girls, has dif- which is represented by all the girls' ferent meetings in which to discuss the plans and work for the benefit of the girls. Oftentimes all the girls cannot go to these meetings and some girl writes up the important events of the meetings and they are pub-ished in the Nebraskan. In this way, the girls find out what has been done and by it being published in the University paper, the girls wish to do more things in order to be represented in the Nebraskan. The same can be said of the organizations of the boys as well as of the girls.

But there are many things published in the Nebraskan which are not representative of the student body. This is true of material concerning debates, athletics and ideas concerning campus "dope." Many students are not interested in these individual experiences and do not express their opinions upon them nor even take time to read them. It seems in many cases that the paper represents the editors. They publish articles which are of interest to themselves and think they will influence the student public to look upon them in the same light as they do. The editors publish remarks and ideas of different members of the faculty, yet this does not indicate the Nebraskan is representative of the faculty. The way the faculty items often appear in the paper is by some student telling the reporter of questions discussed in the class room and these articles then appear in the paper.

One might infer that the Nebraskan is representative of the student body because different students are reporters for the paper. But here each one has a line of work to "cover," and only the most prominent society notes are gathered for publication. These reports are handed into the Nebraskan office and the editors use their own discretion about publishing them.

This has been told by one of the reporters.

If the paper were entirely representative of the student body, each individual would be a subscriber of the Nebraskan and try to create college spirit. As it is many do not take the paper and even do not thoroughly read it when they have the opportunity if this were true the paper would not serve to such a great extent as a Bulletin Board.

Remembered His Old Professor

Prof. Laurence Fossler had a beautiful surprise a day or two since, in the shape of a nice big box of delicious apples—such as one reads about—from Everett, Wash. The sender withheld his name, but as the professor knows of only one man capable of doing such a thing at Everett he more than suspects his one-time student, Mr. John B. Fogarty, of the class of '91, to be the guilty party. That the apples were delicious and fragrant enough to fill our "sanctum," the staff of the Nebraskan is in a splendid position to testify.
