despair, as it were, of rivalling their defter cousins, one irresistibly reacts to the humor of the situation. And so the jolly fun goes on—the innocent sport of young and lightsome hearts.

The menuetto reminds us of the courtly grace and simple dignity of the earlier school of composers, but the rythmical and harmonic handling is more original and profound than in the old time minuet. In the so-called Frio but little trace of fun or frolic is left; it is more like an old love ballad, with its horns leading the air. As the Allegretto calls to mind the high spirits of the young folks, so the menuetto, we may fancy, represents the more sedate amusements of their elders.

In the Finale, which is after all the greatest movement of the four, we see Beethoven's genius in a most characteristic phase. Nothing could at first hearing seem more rudimentary than this simple rythmical motive. Its answer of compliment has somewhat more of melodic character, and these two constitute the larger part of the movement. A short, sweet melody ensues, giving in its new key and changed character the needful color contrast. Then the first theme reappears, and a tiny phrase of it is discussed by the different instruments. First timidly and in whispers, two or three try it at the same time, attacking it at different pitches; some invert it. The different instruments exhibit a hopeless tendency to argue over the matter, but apparently without getting to any conclusion. Through it all two long notes are heard, now above, now below, after discordant with the other voices singly and collective. They are all sheep without a shepherd, men without a common, unifying ideal, when suddenly the original theme sounds forth, and instantly chaos becomes order, the emaningless is touched with significance, and with richer, fuller experience we are home again.

But once more we are led out into new regions. This time a solemn, descending dirge-like motive, answered by a similar ascending chant. Over and over again is this strange dialog repeated in dread hush of mystery. Then an effect even more solemnizing is produced by slow vibrations and grand, soul-stirring harmonies. But when this magnificent pomp has reached its climax of grandeur, the pace quickens, a gleam of sunshine breaks through the gloom; once more are we on familiar ground, and with this home coming there is great and final rejoicing.

What College Men Do

The statistics from the United States bureau of education, taken in four-year periods a century apart, reveal some interesting facts. They show the decrease and increase in the various professions which college men follow after being graduated. The investigations show a falling off in the number of graduates choosing law and medicine in the last of the three periods studied, as contrasted with the one in the century preceding. The per cent of those entering the ministry, business and education as a profession are as follows:

	Ministry	Business	Education
1696-1700	65.6%	1.6	4.7
1796-1800	24.4%	5.6	10.
890-1900	5.9%	18.8	26.7

A certain young man who was in love wrote his little bunch of sweetness as follows:

"Dearest, my love for you is stronger than coffee or the kick or a cow. When I think of you my heart flops up and down like mother's churn dasher. Sensations of the most exquisite joy go through me like young goats over a stable roof. I feel as though I could lift myself with my boot straps to the height of a church steeple. As a goslin swimmeth in a mud puddle, so do I swim in a sea of delightfulness when you are near me. My heart oscillates like a shaker in a mining mill, and my eyes stand open like cellar doors in Frost. If my love is not reciprocated I will pine away like a poisoned bed bug and you will catch cold over my grave."—Ex.

Mystic Fish Leaders

At a recent meeting the Mystic Fish elected the following officers:

Frances Whitmore, president.
Vivienne McNamara, vice president.
Elenore Bennett, secretary.
Lois Hardy, treasurer.
Helen Manier, reporter.

With a pocket full of money
Any coward can be brave;
When his skies are bright and sunny
Any man his flag can wave.
But the test of every fellow
Is disaster's sudden blow,
And if he is streaked with yellow
It is then that it will show.

You will ever find a quitter.
If he's leading in the race,
It is when the fight grows bitter
And another sets the pace,
That the coward starts to bellow
And to whimper at his woe;
If a man is streaked with yellow,
When he's pressed it's sure to show.

Can you stand the gaff of losing,
Can you battle to the end;
Take the cuffing and the bruising,
And not let your courage bend?
For the test of pluck is never
When you're leading in the race,
But are you game as ever,
When another sets the pace?
