COBURN SPEAKS AT CONVOCAION PAYS ELOQUENT TRIBUTE TO FORBES-ROBERTSON

Regrets that America Gives No Recognition to Her Artists

"There is nothing real to the stage. It only exists in the imagination of the audience. A play is only real insofar as the audience sees it." This statement was made to a small audience at the special convocation held at the Temple theatre yesterday by Charles D. Coburn, the well known actor.

Mr. Coburn went on to speak of the national theatres of France and the spirit in which they were received by the people. They are more than self-supporting and have never been compelled to touch the appropriation which the French government provides for their support. The people seek the theatres rather than the theatres seeking the people.

"We know and live only by experience," Mr. Coburn said. "The laws of play writing are as exact as those which govern the artist when he sets about painting a picture. If I know the story of a play I can follow it out by the movement of the action. The people are developing a finer sense of art. Modern musical productions, public libraries, art galleries and the universities are important factors in developing this sense.

Regrets Announcement

"It is with deep regret I note the announcement of retirement from active service of Forbes-Robertson, but it is no doubt a great satisfaction to that actor that his country has decorated him for his fine contributions to her stage, by conferring upon him the title of 'Sir Knight,' a title which in itself is nothing, but it is a fine thing as it represents a national honor, an emblem of recognition which England bestows upon her subjects who have, through service and marked ability, become public benefactors. What a pity America has no national form of recognition for her artists. However, it is not of titles but of Forbes-Robertson—actor—that I am pleased to speak.

"I am now marking the milestones of my life by the performances I have witnessed of fine acting, and Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson's 'Hamlet' is the milestone I am now passing. Though this actor is retiring and I may never see him again, I shall never forget his superb, scholarly rendering of that darling of the Bard of Avon—the Prince of Denmark—he was indeed the Prince of Denmark to the fullest extent of my imagination. No reading or rereading of the text can possibly bring out the elements of life that Shakespeare has embodied in the personality of 'Hamlet'; it requires the skilled interpretation by the actor to fulfill this function for us.
