Entered at the postoffice at Lincoln, Nebraska, as second class mail matter under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

Saturday, the twenty-eighth of October, is the last day of registration, which means that if certain candidates are elected some of the people who want them in office had better get busy and register before it is too late. It is easy to put things off till the last minute, but there is always danger of the minute after the last coming before it is expected.

The University man is presumably a well-educated man, and a well-educated man is supposed to be a broad-minded person, with intelligent ideas on the government and economic questions. Therefore it is much more important that a University man should register and cast his vote than the uneducated, ignorant foreigner who will be dragged to the polls, and will cast any kind of a vote, anyway.

It is a serious matter that the right candidates be elected this fall—and it will be far more serious if they aren't.

There are only three more days in which to register.

The team and band will not arrive in Lincoln until tomorrow. Vacation is a temptation—can't blame them for not being anxious to start into their work again.

Ten days till mid-semester!

Again this stupid lack of spirit! There were three men and six women, out of a class of two hundred and fifty, who attended the senior class meeting, yesterday. As a result eight of them were elected to office, which is perfectly all right but very ridiculous. When a person gets to be a senior, is it beneath his dignity to convene with the howling mob or is it because there is a "sameness" to all this class spirit and these meetings "you know?"

There are always the same persons who can be relied upon—and when they receive even the slightest recognition, the first ones to find fault are the ones who have been sitting back calmly till the work is done and the music starts.

The seniors are becoming old, and are nearly grownups, but their manner of haughty contempt, or the usual unconcern, one of the two which was the cause of so few at the meeting—this manner or spirit is the thing that must be driven out of the atmosphere at Nebraska, and it would be very fitting for the seniors to set the example. There must be more wholesome, whole-hearted enthusiasm and boosting. It must pervade the whole atmosphere, so that we can breathe it, think it, hear it and see it everywhere.

REAVIS WANTS MORE MILITARY TRAINING

a larger sum, only 4,000 soldiers have been recruited. Why? Because Americans are not patriotic? No, because a standing army is a commercial proposition, and if a man can make more money at peaceful pursuits than he can in the army, he will not join. In time of prosperity, a standing army cannot be materially increased.

In this respect America is no different from European countries, where the speaker said, standing armies were maintained because the governments considered them a necessity, and kept the ranks filled by compulsory service.

Patriotism is Not Dead
 "Patriotism is not dead. It is here today just as it was in the yesterday of history. The conditions are not right, we cannot see it. Let the opportunity come and the world will see in America an example of patriotism which it has never seen before. Like Mount Ranier on a cloudy day, it cannot be seen. Bring a vital need, and like that mountain it will appear in incomparable glory."

Commercialism, not only in the matter of preparedness, but in all phases of life, received a severe arraignment. "I sometimes think," said the congressman, "that Americans hold the dollar so close to the eye that it blots out everything else. We are, it seems to me, raising our boys to make money rather than to render service to the world. It is a matter of indifference how much money you make; how much property you accumulate. You come into this world with nothing and leave it with nothing. It's what lies between the coming in and the going out that counts. No life is in itself its own justification."
 Mr. Reavis laid particular stress upon the importance of the education being enjoyed by students in the University, and reminded his audience of the sacrifice and self-denial upon the part of parents to make this education possible. That it is more important than anything else in the world was the expressed belief of the speaker.

"I have voted for conservation of water power, of timber tracts, of natural resources of every kind. And yet the one thing which we should conserve above everything else is the youth of America. The strength of this nation lies not with the president nor congress, not with the navy or far-fung battle-line; her greatest strength and her greatest promise lies in the education of her children in the Christian homes of America."

GOOD ROADS BONDS BEFORE VOTERS

meeting of citizens and taxpayers at the court house a few weeks ago. Petitions were drawn up for the submission of the proposition, and the first suggestion that $500,000 be asked for was changed to $800,000. An active organization has been formed of farmers and business men of Lincoln and neighboring towns in the county, to boost the proposition before the voters.

STATE FARM PROVES FALL PLOWING OF WHEAT WORTH WHILE

That early fall plowing for winter wheat pays is evident in all parts of Nebraska as well as on the experimental plots of the agronomy department of the Nebraska experiment station at the University farm. Wheat is growing well on land plowed early, but is not out of the ground on late-plowed land.

In one cultural experiment at the University farm, plots were plowed at various times, but were seeded at the same time. The August-plowed land shows a good growth of wheat, while September-plowed land has none. The reason for the success for the early plowing is that the land is put in condition so as to hold the moisture supplied by early rains.

Sheldon B. Coon, '09, now industrial secretary of the Spokane chamber of commerce, has sent to The Daily Nebraskan a statement issued by the Spokane chamber of commerce because of the various conflicting reports that have been given out of the effects of the prohibition law in Washington. The statement contains merely statistics from the comptroller of the currency, which tend to show that with booze driven from the state, Spokane has not suffered in a business way, but has, in fact, prospered.

L. H. Douglas, former state University student, and now district grazing examiner in the United States forestry service, with headquarters at Denver, visited the University yesterday. He had just come from San Francisco where the grazing supervisors in the forestry service had met for conference. He was accompanied to Lincoln by his wife and a ten-months-old baby.
