Military Prom

The annual regimental ball of the military department was held Friday night at the Commercial club. It was the first dinner dance given by the department and also the first all-University party given at the Commercial club. One hundred couples attended. Red was the predominating color used in the decorations, with the national colors brought out in the flags and streamers about the ball room. The tables were arranged at the sides of the hall, so that a large center space was reserved for dancing, between courses. Red flowers and candles with tulle shades were on each of the tables.

The grand march was led by Blanch Rusk, regimental sponsor, and Lieut. Colonel A. S. Covert; Lillian Gnam and Capt. John Stoddart. The chaperones, for whom special tables were reserved, were Chancellor and Mrs. S. A. Avery, Captain and Mrs. S. M. Parker, Brigadier General P. L. Hall, Prof. and Mrs. P. M. Buck, Dr. and Mrs. R. G. Clapp, Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Harpham and Mr. and Mrs. M. Westermann.

Major Howard Hadley was chairman of the committee in charge of the arrangements and Capt. J. B. Stoddart was master of ceremonies. Capt. R. F. Rohrbough and Capt. H. F. Holtz were the other members of the committee.

The programs were white with the University of Nebraska seal in red and gold and with ribbons in the Uni-colors inserted beneath.

Farm House Banquet

Forty-five were present at the sixth annual banquet of the Farm House fraternity at the Lincoln hotel Saturday evening. P. H. Stewart was toastmaster, and the following responded: "Plans," Oscar Sjogren; "Material," C. L. Christensen; "Labor," E. C. Loriks; "Construction," R. E. Hollans; "Fishing," Ray W. Carpenter; "The Nebraska Farm House," A. W. Ingersoll. The alumni guests were:

The English Club Didn't Find The Bottom Of The Jug

Scandal has broken loose in the rhetoric department. For a long time there has been a feeling about the campus that the instructors of this department have been concealing something. They have been caught winking at one another and wearing very mysterious grins.

Saturday a reporter heard queer gurgling noises coming from room 107 and opened the door to find the cause. Before his astonished eyes stood Searl Davis draining the contents of a gallon jug. It was quite obvious that Mr. Davis was not learning to drink from the receptacle. No glasses or mugs of any kind were in sight. However, other jugs were stationed about the room. The "Order of the Jug" was evidently not a new organization.

Professor Sheelock Gass was perched on top of a desk with a large doughnut in each hand and several other members of the department were enjoying the festivities. Professor Buck arrived only to be informed that he was too late.

Miss McPhee and Miss Craft seemed to think the matter needed a little explanation. They explained that a meeting of the English club had been held in room 210 the previous evening. The club usually meets at the various homes but had decided to meet in University hall as it did many years ago. In the old days doughnuts and cider were always served and Miss Craft had attempted to make it as real as possible. Prof. J. E. LeRoussignol read a story of his own writing which was published in the January issue of the Canadian magazine. Miss Craft also read a story of which she is the author.

It seems that the company was not able to consume all the food provided but all rose early Saturday morning and came down to finish it. Imagine their chagrin when they found that the large sack of doughnuts had disappeared during the night and could not be found. Suspicion centered on Sherley D. Rabbit, who subornly refused to unlock his desk. Things were becoming rather serious for him when shortly before noon Miss Craft appeared and announced that she had put the food away until such time as she thought they needed sustenance. A loyal member of "The Golden Pledge" was present at the morning session but slipped away before she could be interviewed.
