GRACE COPPOCK, '05, IS GUEST OF HONOR AT TEA YESTERDAY

"My favorite colored candy is scarlet and cream," said Miss Grace Coppock, '05, carefully selecting two from the dish offered her at a tea given in her honor yesterday afternoon by Dean Graham.

Miss Coppock is national Y. W. C. A. secretary of China, and lives at Shanghai. She is in America to get twenty-six secretaries to help with the work there, and is spending a few days visiting and making new friends at her alma mater.

When the first Black Masques were announced on Ivy Day just twelve years ago today, Miss Coppock's name was among the charter members.

"It rained that year and we had to have our exercises indoors, just as you may have to do tomorrow," she said, glancing through the windows of Faculty hall.

Library Seemed Natural

"I haven't been on the campus much yet," she smilingly confided in answer to the question as to whether she found the University changed, "but I did go through the library and it seemed perfectly natural. I saw myself pouring over books there as I used to do."

Just then Miss Graham introduced Marguerite Kauffman, president of the senior class. "I ran for the senior class presidency once upon a time," Miss Coppock said. "I'd have won, too, we had everything arranged politically, but the engineers came out full force at the last minute and elected one of their men."

Miss Coppock leaves for Superior this evening. She will return to China the latter part of August.

There are only two higher education schools for women in all China, Miss Coppock said. They are at Peking and Nantung. The Y. W. C. A. is the only large women's association in China. There are no national women's clubs. The association is entirely self-supporting.

Although Miss Coppock has not found twenty-six secretaries, she is confident she will get them. Their passage is already engaged and the money for their salaries has been raised for some time.

Professor Pound Has No Alibi She Is a Cracking Batter

With a dull thud the bat struck the ball and Prof. Louise Pound started on a run for first base. She heard another thud and some feminine shrieks but, with the true instinct of the baseball player, halted not until first base was safely reached. Then she turned to see an irate woman descending from an electric and gesticulating wildly.

The girls giggled. "If there are any damages, you'll pay for this," shouted the woman. Professor Pound strained her eyes in anxiety but remained with one foot firmly planted on first base. Finally the electric departed and the game went on.

The scene was South Seventeenth Street and the actors were the baseball enthusiasts of Kappa Kappa Gamma sorority. Down in the next block the Chi Omegas were doing their level best to block the evening traffic and a very good best it seemed to be. A short time after the episode of the electric, a hit which was good for a home run was sadly interfered with by a passing touring car.

Professor Pound has no favorites in the matter of baseball. She really doesn't know which bunch she enjoys playing with the most, so one night she joins the Kappas, of whom Daisy Parks seems to be the particular star, and the next night she plays with their neighbors down the street, the Chi Omegas, led by Camilla Koch.

Cora Friedline, '13, A. M. '15, will receive her Ph. D. degree at Cornell this spring.

Margaret Wooster, '13, who held a fellowship in psychology at the University of Nebraska for two years, and who this year has held a fellowship in the department of German, has accepted a fellowship in psychology at the University of Chicago for next year.
