ZACH IS UNIQUE AMONG DIRECTORS

ST. LOUIS SYMPHONY LEADER HAS HAD INTERESTING CAREER

Only Orchestra Director in World Who Uses English in Rehearsals, it is Said

festival is the only orchestra conductor in the world who conducts his rehearsals in English. Even English and American conductors speak to their men in either French or German, those being the two languages most generally known to musicians, but Mr. Zach seldom uses any language but that of his adopted country in his instructions to the men who play under him.

Leonard Lieblich, editor of the Musical Courier, one of the two foremost musical journals in America, was in St. Louis sometime ago and paid a visit to the orchestra during a rehearsal. He was much interested in the manner in which conductor and men alike worked, and stated afterwards he never saw a conductor who was more careful to bring out the composer's meaning rather than his own idea of that meaning, than Mr. Zach.

A Scholarly Conductor
"Mr. Zach is one of the most scholarly conductors holding a baton anywhere today," he said afterwards. "He is utterly without charlatany or sensationalism in any form, and his reading of the score is invariably true and full of poetic beauty."

Conductor Zach is the only Pole in the orchestra, though practically every European country is represented among the musicians. He was born in Lemberg, Galicia, in Austrian Poland, in 1864, and though he early showed a decided predilection for music his father decided to make a lawyer of him and but for his father's early death he probably would have made music a diversion rather than a profession. He had been taking lessons on the piano and violin during his school days, as is the custom in European countries, and when, after his father's death, he was sent to the Vienna conservatory, he was fully prepared for the higher work of that institution.

In the Army
At the age of nineteen he entered the Austrian army to perform his term of military service and was assigned to the orchestra of the Thirty-first Regiment of infantry, as a member of the first violin section. Alphonse Czibulka, the composer, was conductor of this orchestra. At the end of his term of service he left Austria and came to America to join the Boston symphony orchestra, with

A University Y. M. C. A. Number
The University Y. M. C. A. will be the subject of a number of special articles in the Friday Daily Nebraskan. The Christian association, during the past year, has been doing a lot of efficient work, making little noise about it, but work that the average student will be glad to learn about. This work of the association will be covered briefly but completely, in Friday's Daily Nebraskan. The Y. M. C. A. feature will be in addition to the regular daily features of The Nebraskan.

which organization he remained until going to St. Louis as conductor of the symphony orchestra nearly eight years ago.

Mr. Zach was solo viola player in the Boston symphony, assistant conductor, and official accompanist for the orchestra. Also, he acted as conductor during several of the orchestra's summer tours, and was conductor of the "Pop" concerts given by that orchestra from 1895 until 1907, when he went to St. Louis.

Mr. Zach took charge of the St. Louis orchestra at the time the St. Louis symphony disbanded the chorus that was a part of the organization, to concentrate upon the up-building of the orchestra, and is in reality the father of the present splendid organization. He has built it up from a forty-man orchestra to its present strength, and has made it one of the best orchestras in the west, according to the statements of artists who have appeared under its auspices in the last two years.
