PROF. ROSS WILL GO ON MISSION TO RUSSIA

Prof. E. A. Ross of the department of sociology at the University of Wisconsin, formerly a member of the Nebraska faculty, will go to Russia in June as a special representative of the American Institute of Social Service. Professor Ross has traveled extensively in Europe, South America and China and his work in the way of enlightened interpretation from a sociological point of view, to quote institute officials, has the highest approval of authorities in his field.

How Gotham Turned Out When Joffre The Conqueror Came

Merrill Reed, '14, an assistant in the department of botany of Columbia university, viewed the arrival of Marshal Joffre and the French mission in New York. He has written an interesting description of the scene in a letter home, excerpts from which are printed below.

At the time he wrote the letter, Reed was undecided as to his own course in the war. He has since enlisted in the officers' reserve corps and left New York Monday to report at Fort Snelling.

The letter follows:

"Joffre, Marshal of France, and conqueror of the Marne has certainly come, seen and conquered Gotham. He swept by in a big car, marked by his blue great coat with red cape, red cap and white hair. And the simplest description of him would be possibly, 'a sturdy, kindly, red cheeked man.' Looks, strange to say, remarkably like his pictures.

"It's wonderful how the crowds rose to greet him. People stood for hours in cramped positions, pierced by a fierce wind, to yell themselves hoarse.

"The other men in the retinue were merely figures to form a background. Some, a few, recognized Viviani. All knew and cheered 'the Blue Devil,' who, by virtue of his wooden leg, 'made in the U. S. A.' claims to be part American. But when Joffre went by, they tore loose, cut in with an extra lung and roared.

"I mounted a fence of gas piping at Grant's tomb to get a better look at him, and congealed by degrees. (I could almost measure 'em) for another hour. A neighbor fence bird turned out to be a middle-aged gentleman who was a veteran of the Seventh regiment—"the millionaire regiment"—and he filled me with stories of war and peace, America and Europe, until the parade paraded. I mentioned that I wanted to get to France to do my bit, whereupon he offered to take me down to the armory and present me for membership in the Seventh—just about like joining a club. It will probably be one of the first to get to the trenches, and one could do worse than to enlist there.

"I told him I'd consider it—that just now I was under government orders, and would have to be released first. The Seventh regiment was the original national guard (I'm quoting from my friend), so named at Lafayette's suggestion after the national guard of France. The dress uniform is blue, fancy, and modeled on the old French costume. And the officers are men of influence. 'Better a non-com. in the Seventh than captain of another.'

"Well, that's neither here nor there. Just to form a background for the rest of my story, for the Seventh in full dress uniform shakos, patent leather belts, and gold braid—marched up, formed line in front of us, facing the tomb, and awaited the procession. Really a finely drilled organization, that will do its bit in a manner to be proud of, no doubt, wealth or no wealth.

"Soon the motorcycle officers came up, and a fluttering of flags and rising sound of voices down the drive told us Joffre was coming.

"He rode with his hand at the visor of his cap in salute—just like they do in Pathe's weekly. In fact, I'd seen him once already in the movies, and he looked perfectly natural. Yet here it was different—you heard the voice—you made some noise yourself—you saw the color that is lacking in the film.

"The regiment stood at 'present,' and the whole procession of cars came up, the men walked up to the tomb, and the papers will say that Joffre stood silent at attention, gazing down thoughtfully on the coffin of a general who also was hailed as the savior of a nation.

"To the commonplace—I got everlastingly tired and chilled, perching up on that fence top. When I climbed down—I'd had a great view over the heads of the crowd—I felt as though one of my shin bones had been transformed to wood, also.

"But I saw Joffre, and that's something."

ROTARY CLUB GIVES $400 TO ORPHANS

The campaign to raise a fund to provide for 250 of the fatherless children of France, to which University people have contributed freely, continues with no lessening in enthusiasm. At the noon luncheon of the Rotary club, President Harry Porter introduced Prof. F. M. Fling, who spoke for five minutes on our duty toward our French allies, especially the widows and children of the soldiers who have given their lives for the common cause.

Another five minute speech was made by Prof. J. E. LeRoussignol, after which the members of the club responded so readily that in a few minutes no less than $26 in cash was subscribed, besides provision for the care of nine children, amounting to about $400 in all.

Max Westermann of the finance office, the local treasurer of the fund, reports $472 contributed by the following people:

- Mary L. Spalding.
- S. O. Salisbury.
- Benjamin F. Bailey.
- Harry Porter.
- Mr. and Mrs. L. E. Hurtz.
- J. R. Roberts.
- Yates Lumber & Coal Co.
- F. P. Quick.
- Dr. C. Emerson.
- John Moore Allison.
- Clinton R. Lee.

May Fete Abandoned for Economy

The annual May Fete, in which all first and second year women students join in a huge costume dance about a May pole on the campus of the University of Wisconsin, will be omitted this year on account of the increased cost of costumes and other materials. Twelfth Night, woman's dramatic society at the university, has also de-decided to abandon the production of Rostand's "The Romancers," for which the society was conducting rehearsals. Simpler and cheaper performances will take its place.

Many other students activities are also being abandoned or curtailed in size in response to a statement of economy that is sweeping the campus.—Ex.

Our Daily Poem

He met her on the stairs,
As 'twas do't, he kissed her;
"Oh, excuse me," then he said:
"I thought you were my sister."
Then he held her hand and
Was glad he hadn't missed her.
"Oh, don't mention it," she said.
By Gosh, it was his sister.
