POE TOWLE AT THE ORPHEUM, DOES NOTHING IN PARTICULAR, BUT, OH, SO WELL

There is a fellow at the Orpheum this week who does just nothing in particular—but Oh he does it well.
He talks a lot, and plays a little, and his hearers applaud him till the stage helper has to drag him away to make room for the next act. Joe Towle is his name—and he is one of the best of several all-around good acts on the bill which opened Tuesday.—Denver Express.

The Prodigal Son Ten Years Later

A beautiful gift book just published, containing a story for students, soldiers and other young people just breaking home ties

By John Andrew Holmes, Minister First Congregational Church, Lincoln, Nebraska

Here is a little narrative of genuine beauty—Brooklyn Eagle.
I am very much interested in it. I hope that a great many boys through the influence of this book will see how foolish as well as how wicked a thing it is to wander off into the far country.—Francis E.
Clark, the father of Christian Endeavor.

The originality of the conception, the felicity of the narrative, and the evident and timely lesson involved so delicately in it make it of permanent value.—President Ozora S. Davis, Chicago Theological Seminary.

If any reader thinks he has appreciated all the meaning which lies in the greatest of the parables we advise him to read a little book called "The Prodigal Son Ten Years Later" (Pilgrim Press, 50c net) and discover what true scholarship added to deep human understanding can still do for this theme. Dr. John Andrew Holmes, without any reading-in of irrelevances or fanciful exegesis or emotional rhetoric, has lit up the old story with a light more nearly, we imagine, the light with which it was first kindled in the mind of the Master than all the elucidations of the theologians. Here is a little book worth giving to a boy leaving home. We can really imagine him reading it. If he reads it we can hardly conceive of him ever being deceived again by the most specious sophistries of the leering conductor of the "Seeing Life" automobile. All that was strong and true in the old Puritanism is here united with all that is human in the new theology; the result seems to us to be probably a picture of the prodigal son as Jesus thought of him.—The Congregationalist, Boston.
