THE GAME

Nebraskans, in the biggest and most enthusiastic rally within the memory of nearly every student on the campus, showed that the Cornhusker spirit that brings victory still lives. The determination to support the team through every minute of play until the whistle blows, whether it is losing or winning, is the determination which has had much to do with the long list of favorable decisions set down in the Husker annals.

It is the same spirit shown at the rally which will make possible the overcoming of all odds in favor of Iowa Saturday afternoon. Particularly commendable is the attitude and spirit of the freshman class. By their attendance they have shown themselves to be loyal supporters of the Scarlet and the Cream. They have given every evidence that they are worthy Nebraskans.

Iowa comes to Lincoln with a powerful team, composed of nine letter men and two others, according to Assistant Coach Schissler who are even better than the veterans. Iowa comes with the desire to avenge her defeat of last year and the confidence that she will succeed. Nebraska will win by fight and Nebraska spirit. The spirit must be supplied by loyal Cornhuskers filling the rooster's section, who will back the team in every play.

With the filing of several new candidates for the class offices on Thursday the prospect of two or three spirited fights have materialized. Among the filings are those of prominent University women who will undoubtedly draw a big part of the vote this year.

During the past two years Nebraska women have taken an unusually active part in University affairs and have shown themselves fully as capable as the men in handling the class affairs and in caring for the duties of their offices in a fair and impartial manner. In war-work Nebraska women have shown that they are willing to share the war-time burdens and to do their part bringing victory. It is pleasing to see they are willing to shoulder the responsibilities of the class offices and it is an assured fact that they will receive hearty support from the student body.

THE PEACE RETREAT

The German military mind and the German political mind are cast in the same mold. The theory that "war is a continuation of a political policy," which is contrary to the civilized notion that it is an unhappy substitute for negotiation, has sent the politicians and the soldiers to the same teachers. The regularity of the civil method is as unbending as the logic of the military scheme. First, there is the peace offensive, which always follows a more or less successful military offensive. We can imagine the political board of strategy of the great general staff sitting around a table with maps of the national emotions and racial ambitions: "On the 30th 'Vorwarts' will begin a light skirmish to distract the French and English socialists. The 'Frankfurter Zeitung' will lay down a heavy barrage on the pacifist press of the United States. The parliamentary liberals will create a diversion for universal suffrage, but on the 31st will join the main body under the chancellor, who will hurl an immense mass of shock lies, promises, and threats against the center. After this the army of misfortune will dig in and await results."

And just as the military arm has its retreat experts, who have recently been working overtime, so the political branch, as soon as the news comes of a reverse in the field, begins a strategic withdrawal from some salient "which it was deemed inadvisable to hold." Like the generals, the statesmen invariably announce that they had longed planned this retreat, and although they may have dropped Alsace-Lorraine and Belgium in their flight, and are still out of breath from running, they are prepared to prove that the enemy has gained nothing and that they are now on a line prepared beforehand and impregnable to attack. We may be sure that when the allied troops are across the Rhine and the German chancellor is announcing that for the sake of peace he will surrender, not only Alsace-Lorraine and Belgium, but the German colonies, tear up the Brest-Litovsk treaty as his predecessors have torn up all other treaties, conventions, and promises, pay an indemnity to France and give back to Italy the Austrian provinces, we shall hear that "the retreat was conducted with good order and according to plans long considered by the highest command, the Austro-Hungarian forces assisting energetically."—Collier's.

ONE! TWO! THREE!

The Kaiser sent his Zeppelins across to London town
 To terrorize the populace by raining shrapnel down.
 And when they'd done their murderous work and turned to flee away
 Another million Englishmen jumped out and joined the fray.
 For when the British bulldog takes an interest in a fight
 The more they try to frighten him the harder he will bite.

The Kaiser pounds at Paris with his brand new long-range gun,
 And thinks to fill the citizens with horror of the Hun.
 But forth the furious Pollus swarm like bees from out a hive,
 And in a fleeting day or two they stop the Teutons' drive.
 And when the Kaiser calls his troops to come away from there
 He'll have discovered that the French are mighty hard to scare.

The Kaiser sends his U-boats out to back his foolish boast
 That he will scare us breathless if he raids the Yankee coast.
 And we arise in all our wrath and vow to sweep the sea
 Till every single submarine is where it ought to be.
 And when they're sunk he'll know that we don't give a tinker's dam
 For any one who thinks it safe to frighten Uncle Sam.

—James J. Montague.

MILITARY DEPARTMENT

(Edited by W. H. Campen)

Question 1—After the S. A. T. C. men are in the barracks, will they have access to some quiet study room in which to study, other than those now afforded by the University?

Answer—In addition to the regular study halls you may visit the various places offered to soldiers, such as the Y. M. C. A. As far as is known the barracks will not be used as a study room.

Question 2—After the S. A. T. C. men are in the barracks, will they be allowed to keep their suit-cases or traveling bags in which they may keep their books, toilet articles and so on; or will lockers be assigned to them?

Answer—You will retain your suitcase until you are assigned camp boxes.

Question 3—I have heard that S. A. T. C. men, after vaccination and inoculation, may return to their homes until they have recovered from the effects?

Answer—You will stay here as soon as you are taken in.

Question 4—What is the exact routine of induction in the S. A. T. C.?

Answer—After you are examined your papers are sent to Washington.

From these papers are sent back. Then you are notified to appear at the Armory by a form of greeting. These greetings are sent by E. A. Webb, head of the transfer board of Lincoln. He has been appointed by the government to handle this work for the local boards.

When you get the greetings you are virtually in the army. You must obey orders. If you fail to do so in 24 hours you are classed as a slacker and will be thrown in Class 1 to be sent to a training camp as soon as possible.

Sergeant Webb wants to warn the few men who failed to report following the summons. Watch your mail and avoid disgrace to yourself.

teaching profession, including rural, grade, high and normal schools, colleges and universities.

During the first two months after the establishment of the bureau, calls came from 1152 localities in twenty-seven states, for 1593 positions; 736 persons applied for positions, 1161 recommendations were made and 865 replies were sent reporting no available candidates for the work.

The type of work called for is especially interesting to university students. Among the calls, many were for engineers, clerical workers, statisticians, vocational training workers, dietitians, interpreters and social workers. Some of these calls were from large corporations throughout
