"FOR NEBRASKA I WILL"

Nebraska "wills" to win from Washington tonight. You Cornhuskers, who have thus far registered apathy in your attitude towards the basketball team, adopt the motto suggested by Dr. Stewart, and pledge that, "For Nebraska I Will." This powerful slogan which has energized the will-power and determination of generations of athletes at the University of Chicago, is surcharged with suggestion.

If the Armory is thronged with enthusiastic Cornhuskers tonight, we are certain to win. Captain Jackson has said that Nebraska could have beaten Camp Dodge by a good margin if the student body had added its support to the team during the games. The necessary stimulant that is given by undiluted enthusiasm is the factor that "puts the team across." Remember then, that "For Nebraska I Will," and come with your whole fraternity or sorority tonight to the game. Let's put to the test Dr. Stewart's "psychological waves" and determine if they are of practical value.

Conclusive evidence that all social restrictions occasioned by the war have been relaxed was advanced by the new reporter who guessed they must be going to wear full-dress suits at the opening of the peace conference, because he noticed in his favorite newspaper yesterday where the conference was "to be formally opened."—Ohio St. Lantern.

THE R. O. T. C.

Returned soldiers are prone to make fun of the R. O. T. C. units that are now being established in all the universities over the nation. To men who have spent months in the training camps of America and Europe, and have been subjected to the grinding discipline or rigid army life, the new organization has the semblance of primer effort. For men who have lived in the trenches, and who have gone "over the top," against the enemy, the R. O. T. C. takes on the appearance of child's-play. Such an attitude has excellent foundation. The R. O. T. C. has no place in the college curriculum of these men. They have earned for themselves the certificate of proficiency in military instruction. To resume university drill work, will detract from the glorious dream that they will carry through life, of the days of toil and drudgery spent in the army camps of Uncle Sam.

But the R. O. T. C. has its place, and in the near future, when the system of universal military training is brought to America, the signification of its roll will assume huge proportions. The coming generation of college men will need the R. O. T. C. The military discipline occupies a definite place in the university life of each student. The physical development and mental alacrity that arises from such training as is received from instruction given by the R. O. T. C., is invaluable.

The University welcomes the return of the R. O. T. C., and the new commandant, Capt. C. J. Frankforter. We are certain that they will find appreciation from the first year students, and those who have not received the benefits of regular army training. Cheerful support may not be evidenced at first, but in the course of the semester, students will gradually become accustomed to the five o'clock hour drill and will acquiesce to the training. Trodding the cobble-stones seems a far cry from the fond, pre-conceived conception of college life but you must realize, freshmen friends, that it is all in the daily grind, and that just as you put yourself wholeheartedly, and graciously into your work, will you reap the benefits of your college training. In other words, you will get out of your work, just what you put into it.

BENGSTON TO GO TO EUROPE NEXT WEEK

Professor Bengston is well qualified for this position. In addition to his economic affiliations with the war trade board, he has done much special work along agricultural lines, and has written many magazine articles on the agricultural industries, besides a book on the wheat industry. This experience in Europe will greatly add to the value of teaching the physical and commercial geography of that country, which Professor Bengston will have charge of when he returns to the university next fall.

 ready to meet anything in the 158 division. The 175 pounders present a formidable front and Fuchs, Dobson, Hoyt, Sandstedt and Pickwell will hold the line in this sector. The heavy artillery is composed of Lyman, Dobson, Hoyt and Pickwell.

Troendly and Fuchs are both experienced men and will be sure point winners. Dobson is a bear on the defensive and will handle anything that comes his way. The whole team shows up strong and Dr. Clapp will have a well balanced bunch of grapplers with which to oppose any conference team in the valley.
