Green sweaters on a sawdust field. Verily, these are strange times and students at the University of Nebraska are about to witness strang things. For years past the Cornhuskers have been accustomed to appear upon the football field clad in scarlet or crimson sweaters. Sometimes stripes of white in varying numbers and widths adorned the football garb. Until a year or so ago, home games were played upon the grassy turf of Nebraska field. Now comes the announcement that the Huskers will trot upon a sawdust-covered Nebraska field next Saturday clad in green jerseys. They tell us that green is a more proportionate color, that it does not distort the size of a football player and make him appear larger than he really is. At that it comes as an innovation, a shock to the sensibilities of those who have been accustomed to cheering for the Scarlet and the Cream. As to Nebraska field. It lost all traces of vegetation several years ago and the sawdust will be used to cover up the mud and make a softer lighting place. Perhaps the green jerseys will make up for the lack of color on a field where the grass has refused to grow.

NOTRE DAME IS COMING

They are coming—the blue and gold sweaters we have seen four times before on Nebraska field, the sweaters that have always made as tingle with respectful fear when we saw them play. Twice the Scarlet and Cream has emerged victorious from the fray, once the visitors were triumphant and again the game came out a tie. Notre Dame will be here next Saturday with its characteristic speedy backfield and its mammoth line which has always spelled danger for Nebraska.

It is the first game of the season at home and a crowd of thousands is looked for on Nebraska field on the opening day. Close to two thousand students will have reservations in the south stands in a section which stretches from one twenty-yard line to the other. Massed in the center will be two sections of Nebraska co-eds, a bright spot in the midst of hundreds of Nebraska men who will be grouped about them on either side. Little room will be left for outsiders when students who have bought season tickets fill tier upon tier in the south bleachers. It will be a throng solidly back of the team, bursting with pent-up enthusiasm to break forth in hearty cheers.

Notre Dame has a team which will, perhaps, give the Huskers the hardest fight of the year. Nebraska has the latent power to defeat the Hoosiers. Notre Dame knows it; we all know it. Next Saturday will put it to the test, and will determine whether fight, grit and student backing can bring it out.

FORGET THE JAZZ

Students of the University have a peculiar opportunity which other citizens throughout the state, as a rule do not have, namely that of hearing real jazz as interpreted by America's leading artists.

Our fathers seemed to have time to study and learn to appreciate the finer literature and art; good music was a part of their lives, but we are too busy. It is time for us to stop a moment and take time to cultivate the classics. It is getting so students actually dislike so-called "high-brow" music. Jazz, jazz, jazz is all we hear. We need something better. Every student at the university can accord both time and money to attend the occasional treats we have, even if it means the sacrifice of a dance or two.

As members of this state institution we are this year particularly fortunate, and it behooves us to appreciate our blessings and take advantage of them.—The Daily Kansas.

A FRESH FRESHMAN

Lawrence, Kansas.—Raymond P. Henze, a freshman at the University of Kansas now wears the little blue cap, after an exciting chase thru Fraser Hall to the Chancellor's office and a ducking in the lake.

Freshmen and upperclassmen joined in a chase arming themselves with paddles. Prior to the chase Henze would not wear the cap and it was determined by the upperclassmen that he would. After a search he was discovered on the roof of the Fraser building armed with a piece of gas pipe two feet in length. A group of freshmen succeeded in driving him from the roof.

He succeeded in leaving the building but reentered by way of the awnings and several times leaped from one ledge to another while the crowd below held its breath. He was finally driven to the top of one of the ventilators where he held the crowd at bay.

After an interference on the part of the University employees on account of damaging University property Henze escaped and took refuge in the chancellor's office. After a conference with the chancellor he appeared at the window. "Well, men," he said, "I have decided to wear the cap. However he did not escape punishment and was rushed to a lake where a ducking was administered to him. On his way home that night he said, "Well, I gave you something to talk about anyway."

SIZE AGAINST THEM

When the returning troops of the 29th division were received with acclaim in the streets of their own Baltimore, one 4-year-old daughter of that community was not only impressed but puzzled.

"Where have they been?" she wondered. "In France." "And what were they doing there?" Fighting, my dear." There was a long pause, during which she shook her head disapprovingly. "Well," she said finally, "they look to me like pretty big boys to fight."
