THE GAME AT OMAHA

The playing of the Oklahoma game in Omaha Saturday marks the development of new and happier relations between the state university and the Nebraska metropolis. There was a time when such friendly feeling did not exist, when relations were, in fact, somewhat strained because the athletic department did not see fit to play one of its big football games in Omaha. Omaha alumni and business men did not give up their fight, however, until they succeeded in winning their desired end by the decision of the university to play a football game away from the home campus.

The growth of the medical college at Omaha has contributed largely to the change in sentiment. The college has come to be recognized as such an integral part of the university that the university considers it a part of its "home campus" and felt justified in withdrawing from the Missouri Valley conference to uphold this claim. It was a daring move to make but Nebraska does not regret it and she feels that the support she will receive from Omaha will more than repay her for this action.

THE FRIENDSHIP CURE

There are on the campus, we believe a lot of lonesome boys and girls. Some even border on homesickness. Most of us have gone through the same thing. Time, with the acquaintances it brings, is the only cure. The new student is hungry for friends. The professor or old student who puts his arm of friendship around the new student will in time be well repaid. Our first impression is truly the guiding influence of our likes and dislikes and if by extending the glad hand we can furnish an example of Nebraska spirit let us do it.

REWARDS OF MORAL HONESTY

Why can not we, as college men and women, stand for the highest type of moral honesty? We should frown upon cheating in any form whether the copying of some one's else examination or voting unfairly in a class election.

Ninety per cent of our actions in life are the result of previously formed habit and we cannot in fairness to ourselves permit the erection of an obstacle which may detain us on the way to success. This is not pedagogy but just common sense and a good business policy.

Relying upon our own knowledge creates self confidence, enlarges the memory and makes us feel square. Voting once and in the proper spirit gives us more confidence in the men and women we elect to office.

LETTERS TO THE GRADS

One of the strongest factors in the mind of the average American youth when he is deciding to enter a college or University is the attitude which student and alumni of an institution take toward it. The final decision of most students in choosing a school of higher learning can be traced directly or indirectly to the advice of some friend of that institution.

Iowa has countless hundreds of friends who are legion and as result an unprecedented enrollment is on record at the registrar's office. The spirit of Iowa borne by the sons and daughters of Old Gold has permeated every corner of the Hawkeye state but yet Iowa enthusiasm has been limited to the comparative few. Many students go out of the state neglecting the splendid educational opportunities provided by their own commonwealth.

Students who have their Alma Mater at heart will see an opportunity to make friends for the University this fall. Gigantic plans are in the process to make the annual Home-coming one of unusual interest to old grads of the University. Committees are arranging a festal occasion which has not been equaled in past year. Coincident with Homecoming is to be the kick-off of the Iowa Memorial Union in its campaign for one million dollars. The student's privilege is in inviting alumni and citizens of the state to the University for Homecoming.

Personal letters have a psychological effect at any time but especially at Homecoming do they challenge the loyalty of genuine Iowa men and women when they cry rings out on Iowa Field "Beat Ames." Few alumni can stave off the inherent lure of their University born in other days when they were a part of the campus life. It is the one word Homecoming that makes the blood tingle in the veins of every red blooded lover of Old Gold. A letter now, an invitation today, from the student, from the fraternity, from the sorority, and from the literary society will bring thousands of alumni and former students back to Iowa City in November.

To bring back alumni at this time is the initial movement toward a Greater Iowa. Hundreds of Iowa men are ignorant of the advance of the University since they have passed from its doors. A visit in November will renew their bonds and draw them closer to the University of which they are a part. A visitor means a friend; many friends mean more students; more students mean a Greater Iowa—the goal toward which we are striving. Write ten letters today.—The Daily Iowan.

STUDENT OPINION

According to statement, "the rules are on." Just for whom and by whom inflicted is not specifically stated, but it would seem that they are in effect from now on.

Everyone remembers what a cry for democracy has been going on around Nebraska and the average student is fully aware that some remedy is needed, for certainly many students go through a school without knowing who their neighbor in class is. Naturally the students who are interested in Nebraska have tried devious ways and means of getting more people in college more generally acquainted with other students. The Nebraska student has patronized mixers, though they are still held in the closest of quarters—inadequate and uncomfortable. That the mixers have never been in a large enough place, such as the auditorium, seems a deep mystery to many; but the crowded condition still prevails. And when students have "hour-get-togethers" in an endeavor to really start the idea of each student becoming at least partially acquainted with others, again the ban descends.

On the subject of afternoon calls, the mere saying "Nay" will not prevent this; it will only make necessary the feeling that gentlemen should be entertained outside of home. Is this what students want to happen?

And to conclude, in a university of the rank of Nebraska, with its proud alumni record achievement, are the students incapable of knowing whether to dance with the same girls during the evening or not?

Rather should a definite plan of real co-operation be started so that everyone can help boost Nebraska, than let individual effort try and run against a stone wall.

George D. Bushnell.
