KANSAS STUDENTS ARE READY TO DIG COAL

Fifteen hundred Kansas state agricultural students are ready to help dig coal until the miners go back. Governor Allen received a telegram from President William Jardine of the college stating the students willingness to help in the present coal famine.

The governor is now outlining a plan to induce the miners to return to the mines but there seems to be no assurance that the men will accept his plan. If they refuse, the students will lay aside their books and take up the picks and shovels of the striking miners.

THE PRECOCIOUS EAST

Our worthy contemporary, the Kansas State Collegian in commenting upon a recent ruling made by the faculty of Wellesly college prohibiting its students, who are all women, from using tobacco while attending that institution further adds: "the old order changeth; Indiana schools of the co-educational variety have been dealing with tame little problems relating to the number of social engagements the students may have in any one week, and whether dancing should be permitted. Meanwhile the east has forged ahead (?) and old Wellesly is trying to regulate the smoke and the smoker."

Yet withal we wonder that the institutions of Hoosierdom are looked upon by the west as vice free. Tradition has it that our worthy seaboard neighbors look upon us of the west as a certain species of individuals representing a cross between a rough neck and a four flusher of the first order. Just where we Hoosiers come in is not plain but evidently the use of the obnoxious weed by the co-ed members of our institutions have passed over on to the fairer lands west.

Down east folks look upon other individuals in this part of the country as more or less crude, associated with the idea of homespun and corn pone. We are hardly enough sophisticated that our co-ed members have acquired the idea of the single standard and begun to do the same things as men. However in the west it may be different. Here in the midwest and especially in Indiana we have always had an unusual proclivity and a proneness towards individualism where folks read Riley's poetry not because it was classical but because they enjoy it; and where people were accustomed to say "right smart and few of the other provincialisms so dear to the hearts of all Hoosiers."

It is true that the Hoosier colleges are at present engaged in placing the ban on a few of their pet social fads but so far their women have succeeded in educating themselves without acquiring the enervating habits of the prosaic and classical east, or those of the long horn west.—Purdue Exponent.

BUBBLES

Where did you get that perfume?
Down at the one (s)cent sale.
Did you tell him the joke about the aeroplane?
Yes, but it went right over his head.

Places of Interest
The hometown is a place where the men do not wear collar attached shirts and the girls stay out later than 10:30. It is also one of the financial centers of the country, being the habitation of friend father and his money making ideas. It really is a slow town, although some of the things that happen there would make the little old town of Lincoln think that it was under mob rule. The hometown has only a few good points, including the family motor, the long morning sleep with no thought of an 8 o'clock, and a speaking acquaintance with every one there. It is a wonderful place to locate municipal improvements, especially to those who will never visit there. The university affords an excellent place for the hometown to gain prominence, by bringing it to the attention of those students who have never heard of it before. All in all, the hometown has many faults, but its one redeeming feature is that there will be an excellent repast waiting for those who journey back to it on Thanksgiving day.

It has been suggested to us that we write on the bank as a place of interest.

Pardon us while we annoy you with an imitation. Said imitation will be of a horse calling for something to eat: "Hey there."
