POINTS OF INTEREST

conspicuous sharp two-lobed bracts much longer than the scales with mid-ribs prolonged into spine or bristle.

It was discovered by the Scotch botanist, David Douglas, in Oregon in 1825. This is the most widely distributed timber tree of the Pacific states and is known as red or yellow fir, Oregon pine, Douglas fir, Douglas spruce, and Douglas pine.

The wood has an abundance of spirally marked wood cells. The trees are at first pyramidal and spruce-like and afterward more spreading with very thick and rough brown bark.

It bears flat and very narrow linear leaves, spirally inserted but spreading somewhat in two ranks by a twist at the base.

This marvelous block of wood is only one of the many interesting exhibitions at the university museum which have fascinating stories connected with them. Students could spend many interesting hours in this building.
