WORTH WHILE ADVERTISING.

Campus talent is touring the state this week in the interests of the Greater University of Nebraska. Today, and every day for the remainder of the week, an entertainment is being enjoyed by the "home folks" who have little other opportunity to come into intimate touch with University affairs. Most of the varied news items reaching the out-state patrons come through the medium of the press, and, unfortunately, often times such news is perverted. It is gratifying that the University has seized upon such an excellent medium as University Week, to acquaint the taxpayers over the state with an important field of college endeavor. Prejudiced ideas are thus eliminated, and a better understanding is created.

Were it not for the annual excursions of the University Week Association, many people would remain in ignorance of certain phases of our University life. In like manner, an unadvertised product, does not sell on the market for the reason that its merits are not known to the public. Such an article has no value until it is appreciated by the buying public, and a desire for it has been created. Such is the case with the University. Those who know nothing of the institution cannot appreciate its value or true significance. Only by advertising ourselves can we ever impress upon the minds of our sponsors, that we are worth while, and that we have an institution which is deserving of their support.

Let us encourage, then, the excellent work of those who are "doing their bit" to further the good name of the University. They deserve our co-operation and moral support, and the least we can do is to laud their merits to our friends at home as we write them this week. Perhaps they can be thus induced to attend the programs that they might otherwise miss.

THE HONOR SYSTEM.

If the terms "Character-Building" and "A New Columbia" are to become realities instead of mere catch-words, Columbia must support the newly proposed plan of the Student Board for an Honor System in examinations. If Columbia is to try to compete with other Universities of its size and standing, it must relegate to the past an examination system which has a highly organized method of scrutinizing proctorship.

No honor plan will succeed at the University, however, unless it is brought about by the overwhelming opinion of the undergraduates themselves. There can be no such thing as publicity or education to cause the Faculty to pass such a measure. The students must show that if the scheme were adopted they would be certain to make it successful.

As has been found in other colleges where the Honor System is in vogue, it must fail if there is not a careful plan, worked out, in keeping with the sentiment of the men themselves. It cannot be a half-honor, half-proctor supervision of examinations; but it must be entirely one or the other. A suspicious, half-hearted plan will never be respected by Columbia men.

Not only must the College adopt the Honor System, if it is taken at all, but the other undergraduate schools should also. All men who are registered in courses of the schools, which accept the plan, must pledge themselves to obey its precepts.

Some of the difficulties that must necessarily arise with the consideration of the scheme are the matters of whether there should be a Student Committee to report to another committee all offenders; what shall be the penalty for cribbing in examinations; what shall constitute sufficient proof to convict a man; shall the student sign a pledge at the end of his paper that he has not received nor given aid. All these are, of course, but mechanical considerations and can be arranged if there exists among the students the desire and the moral impetus for the Honor System.

In order that the Student Board may know the Campus sentiment in relation to the proposed plan, Spectator suggests that the undergraduates write communications to the paper expressing their opinions of the matter. Not only should they declare themselves in favor or opposed to the plan, but they should also offer suggestions for the carrying out of any scheme that might be accepted. After all, the Honor System, if adopted, will affect all the undergraduates and not just members of the Student Board or of Campus publications who may be acting as sponsors for the idea.—Columbia Spectator.

UNI NOTICES

University Union
University Union will hold a business meeting Tuesday night at 7:00 p. m. sharp. Urgent.

Students, one or both of whose parents have attended the University, are asked to leave their names at Alumni headquarters, if they have not already done so. Over fifty students have already registered. The list is published from time to time in the Alumni Journal.

There will be a meeting of Valkyrie, Monday afternoon, at four o'clock, in Woman's Hall.

Caps and Gowns

Caps and gowns for commencement should be ordered at once at the Co-op Book Store. Measurements must be taken when the order is made. The payment is not made until the garments arrive.

THE COLLEGE WORLD

Women students in Advertising at the University of Missouri, have organized the sorority of Gamma Alpha Chi.

Authorities report that the small-pox epidemic is declining at Franklin College; that no new cases developed during the past week.

The University of Cincinnati has begun a campaign for funds for the erection of dormitories.

General Leonard Wood leads in a straw vote taken at Dartmouth. Woodrow Wilson, fifth in line, is at the head of the Democratic candidates but the Republicans have an overwhelming majority.
