

REGENT WEBSTER O. K.'s
NEW OMAHA CLUB

John R. Webster, Omaha regent of the University, wrote the following to Alice C. Hunter, University publicity agent:

"I am pleased to note the movement to organize an Omaha Club among the University students from this city. While I believe that the first and highest loyalty of every student should be for his Alma Mater, still it is a very desirable thing that those from the same sections of the state shall become well acquainted with one another, and shall have close association for development of friendship, comradeship, and the stimulation of those interests which naturally draw them together.

"Let us by all means have an Omaha Club, and let those who join in this association be moved and stimulated by the highest purposes and ideals for the honor of their home city, and for the honor of our University. Would it not be a fine thing for membership in the Omaha Club to be a sure voucher of high standing in scholarship, in manliness and womanliness, in high ideals, in all that goes to make up the best of American citizenship?"

Season.

Tickets for the Junior Hop, to be held Friday, May 7, at Rosewilde, are going fast, members of the committee stated yesterday. One hundred have been validated, and it is thought they will all be gone in a few days.

Reports indicate that the Junior party will be one of the very finest of the year. Good music, refreshments and some unique entertainment "stunts" which the initiated refuse to divulge promise a good time to all those fortunate enough to be able to attend.

Tickets may be obtained for $1.50 from members of the committee. Its personnel includes Luther G. Andrews, William Watson, Jesse Patty, Stanley R. Hall, Donna Gustin, Helen Downing and James Lucas, president of the class.

Legislative Reference
Bureau Moves From
Uni Hall To Library

The legislative reference bureau has been moved from the third story of U Hall to the basement of the Library; the room vacated is being fitted out as a study room for students of English and modern language. This is the third eriod of the life history of the room.

When U Hall was built there was no floor separating the second and third stories of that art of the building. A chapel was located there, and with it are linked many fond associations of early days at Nebraska. On one Valentine day those entering the room were handed programs. As they walked down the aisle carrying the programs they were greeted with laughter. On the outside of the program folder they discovered hideous valentines. The gallery, the par concerned now, was the retreat of happy lovers who whispered there during the chapel exercises.

Later a floor separated the two stories and the upper one was used for the legislative reference bureau. Its recent removal to the Library was made for the convenience of having various reference rooms in the same building. After next September the historic room in U Hall will be an abode to those who rack their brains over lexicons of many languages.

MISS POUND WRITES ON STYLE OF BALLAD

Miss Louise Pound, of the department of English, has an article entitled "The Uniformity of the Ballad Style" in the last number of Modern Language Notes. She points out that, contrary to the popular view, the ballad style is not uniform but varies in different regions and for different periods.

FACULTY WOMAN MAKES RECORD NUMBER SPEECHES

Forty-eight speeches outside of school, delivered between the opening of the school year and the present time, is the record of one of the women on the faculty of the University. She has addressed the Woman's Club, many other women's organizations and conventions on various subjects, such as Americanization and preparation for the duties of life. She has forbidden the publication of her name in this connection.

Membership
Membership in the fraternity is based largely upon scholarship in journalism, active participation on college publications and the intention to pursue this calling upon graduation. The initiates this year were:

Marian Mote, holder of the scholarship offered by the Association of Collegiate Alumnae, who has not yet done any work along the lines of her chosen profession. Jessie Watson, who came to the state University from Wayne Normal this year and entered immediately into journalistic work. She contributed to the Wayne high school paper while attending that school. Eleanor Hinman, who spent two years at Wellesley College. In 1916 she won a Seabury prize of fifty dollars for an essay on "The Influence of the United States on International Peace," the prize being second of the three awards made in a contest open to all high school seniors in the United States and foreign countries. Katherine Brenke, whose newspaper work began in Lincoln high school, where she was editor of the weekly Advocate. She reported on the Daily Nebraskan and was a Freshman editor of the Cornhusker. This year she is confining herself to work on the Cornhusker. Dorothy Barkley, who also expects to follow the profession of journalism, is doing her second semester's work on the Nebraskan, of which she is society editor.

Other active members are:
Marian Henninger, president, former editor-in-chief of the Daily Nebraskan, on the staff of which she had been for two years, as reporter and associate editor. She is now club editor of the Lincoln Star.

Alyne O'Loughlin, vice-president and delegate to the biennial convention at Madison, Wisconsin, was on the staff of the Awgwan last year.

Carolyn Reed, secretary, was formerly associate editor of the Awgwan, associate editor and now editor-in-chief of the Nebraskan, on which she has served for six semesters. She is also society editor of the Cornhusker.

Harriette Ashbrook, treasurer, was a society and University reporter on the Nebraska State Journal for a year.

Sadie Finch, one of the student life editors of the 1920 Cornhusker, held a similar position on last year's annual and was last year society editor and now associate editor of the Daily Nebraskan. She was also on the staff of the Awgwan for a year and a half.

Dorothy Colburn, who was graduated in 1919 and returned this semester to work toward a master's degree in European history, reported for two years and a half on the Nebraska State Journal, of which she was editor of the woman's department at the time of her resignation. In 1915 she won the Seabury first prize of seventy-five dollars offered in a contest open to all high school seniors in the country for an essay on "The Influence of the United States on International Peace." Eleanor Fogg, before going to Smith College for a year, was an associate editor of the Awgwan and business manager of the Whiskbroom. At Smith she was elected to Blue Pencil, an honorary journalistic society.

Ruth Snyder was on the Daily Nebraskan staff for several semesters and last year was associate editor the second semester.

Two of last year's members are continuing journalism courses at other universities. Patricia Maloney at Washington State and Helen Howe at Columbia, where she assisted in organizing a local journalistic society which is petitioning Theta Sigma Phi.
