(Continued from Page 1.) pointed out some of the most famous examples in history. The Bishop asked all young people about to start their careers to, forget personal aggrandizement and seek to serve.

During the banquet the University orchestra played and between course the students were led in Nebraska songs and cheers. "U-U-Uni" was repeated again and again and the audience stood as the orchestra played "The Scarlet and the Cream."

The committees in charge of the banquet were as follows.

Tickets—Jack Virtue, Janet Maitland, Marion Mote, Asa Hepperly.

Arrangements—Floyd S. Oldt, Grace Stuff.

Decoration—Glen Dorsey, Olive Hartley, William Aldstadt.

"Any scientific study of man must include the religious element," Bishop Stuntz said in opening his talk. Any other view would be narrow and unscientific, he continued, and has been proved over and over again in the countries which have no schools, no churches, no libraries, except those brought by the missionaries of the Christian religion.

Bishop Stuntz told the students that in the long run it was the riches of character, of sympathy and of gratitude of a nation, which counted more than money. He pointed to George Washington as a man known and loved all over the world because he devoted his life to the service of others. As examples of people seeking personal gain he turned to Benedict Arnold, Napoleon and Charles I. He repeated his call for Christian workers and said that thirty University of Nebraska students going out into this kind of life work would be able to make their influence felt all over the world.

Christian Religion Ahead

Bishop Stuntz, who has spent about twenty years of his life in the foreign missionary fields, painted a sorrowful picture of the conditions particularly in India today. He said that there were many towns in that country which had never had a sermon preached in them and that a great number of towns did not have a single Christian institution. "The Christian religion is the only faith which is continually making converts today," he declared, showing that the whole world awaited the missionaries from North America. While the Mohammedan faith is making some headway in Africa, it is weak, and the Buddhists and others are not making any progress.

The Friday evening banquet was the culmination of the work of the Committee of Two Hundred on the
