THE ENGINEER OF TOMORROW.

The engineer has always been looked upon as a man of action, a man who does things whether it be in a small or large way. And in his engineering field he has accomplished great feats. He has spanned mighty rivers, he has tunneled through mountains, he has erected towering skyscrapers. Every one who has read Kipling's "The Bridge Builders" is thrilled with the story of Findlayson, C. E., and his bridge over the Ganges.

But today and even more so tomorrow greater fields are opening to the trained engineer. Public service—world service—is calling for men of calibre. The engineer who has trained his hand as well as his head, the engineer who combines, and it is a rare combination, a large vision with the ability to execute what he conceives that man is taking his place today in the world affairs. When Herbert Hoover so successfully handled the food problem, he appealed to so many people as fine timber for the presidency because he satisfied those who wanted a good business man on the job and he also satisfied those who wanted a man of high ideals. He is looked upon as one of the big men in the United States cabinet today. He is a man that every engineering student might well strive to emulate.

Does the engineering student have a concept of what is ahead of him? Undoubtedly he has registered in the College of Engineering because that is his chosen profession. But whether he remains at the bottom of it or rises to still unreach heights depends not only upon his ability as a practical engineer, but even more so upon the soundness of his knowledge and view of life. Does he think time wasted on such studies as political science and economy, history and literature? Does he read not only engineering journals but those dealing with political, social and economic movements? If he does he is fitting himself to be a competent engineer and even more a competent citizen of society. In which he may some day fill a most important post. For the world's business is growing every day more complicated; as never before it is calling for big men. The engineering student who keeps his head and heart open to the calls of service and trans accordingly will be the big man of tomorrow.

ALWAYS BUILDING.

The engineer who has taken for his special line of work the construction of buildings, great projects and monuments, to which he can some day point with pride and say: "I built that," is now building a brain that will aid him in his material construction later on. He is also developing a character that will endure.

Engineering is an acknowledged difficult course in any or all of its branches. It requires a student to take subjects that are real brain developers. Brain developers are usually character developers because they test out the power of endurance.

Thus the engineer should be a man of mentality.

The engineer should be a man of character.

These lead to the building of bigger things that will live forever.

GOOD TIME MADE

Coach Schulte Picked Men for Participation in Drake Relays.

The College of Agriculture copped first place in the inter-college meet staged yesterday on Nebraska field. A big turn out of cinder path athletes was on hand for the various events and the meet was a big success in every way.

In the 100 yard dash, Stevens of the Law College stepped the century in 10:2 winning from a large field of sprinters. Layton ran true to form and won the 220 yard dash in the record time of 24 flat. Hickman finished second in both of these events. The 440 yard dash was a tie between McDonald and McCarthy. Their time was 52 even. Both of these men will be on the mile relay team that will represent Nebraska at Des Moines Saturday. The other two members of the mile relay team will be Captain John Gibbs and Stromer.

Nichols finished first in the half mile in 2:07 2-5. Allen for the Medics grabbed first place in the mile covering the distance in 4:41 3-5. Dunham crossed the tape first in the two mile run in the time of 10:55. Galt for the Medical school won the high hurdle race in 8:3. Layton won another first when he won the 110 yard low hurdles. The time was 13:2. Wright and Gish ran the high hurdles for try outs with Wright clearing the bars in 15:3 and Gish finishing a step behind.
