AWGWAN IS HERE!

Dedicated to the freshmen of Nebraska, the first issue of Agwan has appeared. From cover to cover it is worth while. Green, symbolical of our freshmen, is used on the cover. Throughout the comic are pictures and jokes on our freshmen.

Freshmen don't misinterpret the jests! Apparently you are getting the rough end of the deal—but you are not. The life-blood of our school comes from you, the first-year class, and we are proud of you. Over a thousand strong you are, a force that will be known not only this year, but during the four years you remain with us. Soon YOU will be editing Awgwan, you, too, will be proud of the classes entering our institution.

Read your humorous publication! The jokes are new ones, and the staff which is a particularly strong one, is putting out a paper that you will look back at, during your stay here, as being one that is hard to beat. A dollar will buy the entire nine issues for you and when you're done with them, send them home so that those most interested in you may laugh at the things you do and get by proxy a certain phase of the life you are leading.

FRESHMAN MEN'S CONVOCATION TODAY.

At eleven o'clock today the freshman men of the university will gather in a body to learn something about Nebraska spirit, Nebraska traditions and Nebraska ideals. This "something" they will learn, will only be their first primer lesson in what Nebraska should mean to every student. School spirit cannot be acquired in a day, loyalty of an intelligent kind comes only through knowledge, and the constructive spirit for a better Nebraska comes only through effort, and for these reasons the class of 1925 is gathered together.

Men who are vitally interested in the men. In charge of the meeting the welfare of Nebraskans will talk to will be the innocents, an organization of senior men chosen because of faithful work for a better school during their freshmen, sophomore, and junior years. The director of athletics, Dr. Leubring, will have a message for every man.

The hour will be an interesting one from many standpoints and well worth while. Let's have a hundred per cent attendance.

STICK IT OUT.

Classes have been under way for several weeks, the steady grind of classroom work is beginning to be stiffened, and already the short-winded students are gasping for breath. Coach Schulte tells his track men that the best "wind" a man can have is that "second wind" that comes after an effort. It is just as true in the classrooms as on the track. The "second wind" is the one worth while. A little harder effort, a little more patience a few less good times, and the "second wind" will come. Then it will be easy sailing.

The freshmen students are beginning to ask "Is it worth while?" It is harder for them to get this "second wind." They are not in condition to show that they, above all, need the training we give. Professors have a tendency to make their students work hard at first, so that the sluffers, the weaklings, and the men with yellow streaks, will leave. It is far easier to work with workers than with those who hold back a class. Remember if you can only keep on, a world of fine things will be opened to you.
Don't be a quitter.

THE LAW IDEA.

A movement is on foot among the senior laws for each man to act as "fathers" to an entering freshman in that college. The idea is mighty fine. Not only is it a practical idea in the law college but in every college in the university. Men and women entering our school are in a world that is new to them. They do not know the "ropes" and have many hard knocks in getting to a place where they can stand on their own feet the way they should.

The women of the university already do this to a certain extent. The men should start it. Anything to reduce the mortality among the first-year student is worth while. Student opinions from upperclassmen on this subject will be gratefully received by the Daily Nebraskan.

CONTEMPORARY OPINION

The Michigan Daily. RESEARCH TO THE FORE.

In times past the hard-headed business man, the practical man of affairs, the efficiency-loving manufacturer, has often held up the scientist, the theorist, the dreamer, to derision. The investigator working alone in his laboratory, urged on only by an absorbing interest and a mighty flame of hope, many times so impeded by lack of facilities and shortage of funds that his work was a positive hardship, seemed too much of a visionary to the practical man to merit anything but his contempt.

But times have changed. The great advances in industrial efficiency which have been the direct results of the scientific work of just such dreamers and theorists have won the respect of practical men everywhere. The effect of this capitulation on the part of the actual manufacturers has been felt in the establishment of various industrial fellowships and of research laboratories.

Just last Tuesday the representatives of the Michigan manufacturers' association voted the sum of $25,000 to carry on the work undertaken by the university along this line about a year ago. The money will be spent in carrying out tests to improve industrial efficiency along general lines. The staff of the university, and the laboratory facilities as well, will be used to find answers to the practical problems which confront the various industries of the state today.

The value of such co-operation between the scientific men of the university, trained along extremely useful lines, with the facilities of the university at their command, can hardly be over estimated. Perhaps the problems to be attacked are not so momentous as those which engaged Newton, Lavoisier, Solvay, Bell, or Edison, but they will be practical problems, and their solution will work to the best interests of the state and people as a whole.

The girls that I meet on the campus each day
They set me to thinking, and lead me to say:
I can't love the same girl, I like every one,
I don't like the same girl, it's not enough fun.

There's Betty, whose merry and happy and gay,
And Doris who seems to be cheerless always.
Her sad, wistful eyes, they appeal to my heart,
Methinks it is pierced by a small Cupid's dart.
But Phyllis comes tripping, I know it is she
Who fills me with gladness whenever I see
Her face, or I know she is coming so soon.
She's a lovely companion by light of the moon.
There's Madge, who is known as our Erab-rah girl,
Whenever you see her, your heads in a whirl.
And if for Nebraska you've never yelled before,
You'll cheer if she's there, you'll cheer and some more.

And then there is Peggy, who's classy, a girl
That all the boys like; her little black curl
Is always a bobbing, she giggles and grins
Till she makes you forget every one of your sins
And if one of these girls is not there when you call,
Sit down, wait your turn, there's a chair in the hall.

At the football game Saturday, the "Laws" had just finished solemnly chanting, "There'll be no lawyers there!" when an elderly, careworn gentleman seated directly in front of me, sighed, "Thank God! We'll not need 'em."

The Exhaust

The machines of the campaigns have been stered temporarily. If the exact locations were known, it would doubtless prove fatal to said machines. The tired mechanics who were rewarded with success beam beneficently at the mention of elections. At least they are satisfied and convinced that the best men won.

"How was the smoker you went to the other night?"
"Not so bad."
"Did you hear any new jokes?"
"A few. I had to wash my ears out when I got home."

We suggest that the feminine politicians introduce some new terminology which may be helpful in future elections. We suggest "May the best woman win."

Upon taking up the distillation of alcohols in laboratory work the students have shown a decidedly awakened interest in chemistry. Possibly some of them aspire to the vocation that has been the study of the revenue officers for the past months.

We predict that Ethel Alcohol will enjoy another season of popularity in spite of the fickleness of some of her friends.

With the price of a shine back to a jitney, we look forward to the time when the price of peanuts comes to roost again.

"I thought you promised Charlotte that you wouldn't drink any more."
"Well, she said, 'Lips that touch liquor shall never touch mine.' You see I use a straw in sipping these cocktails."
—Bouffon
