NO THANKSGIVING RECESS.

The "powers that be" have decreed, this year, that the two days following Thanksgiving WILL NOT be holidays. This decision is one that most of the student body thinks unfair, however the university authorities, no doubt, must have what they think are good reasons for this change.

Several classes Friday and possibly a laboratory section Saturday is the only gain to students if there is no recess. On the other hand the loss, if we stay here, is far greater than the small gain from attending a few classes that might easily be made up by slightly increased assignments or a special meeting of the class at some vacant period.

Since the first day of school, students have been looking forward toward Thanksgiving time, for then, 'twas thought, they could go to their homes and be with the ones they care for most, and preserve the tradition of Thanksgiving, which since little tots in school has been one of the happiest ones they knew. On that day those who care for each other gather together in the cheery warmth of home. To college students, particularly the new ones, the tradition means more than it ever did before. In the first place as we become older the beauty and sweetness of Thanksgiving becomes more appealing, and in the second place, the yearlings, have, for two months, been away from their homes and are eager to confide, in those they love, the little triumphs and the usual trials of a life of this kind.

To our football men we owe these days. These men for months have drilled away hour after hour, and night after night, and when the whistle blows at the end of the last game, they are through the tedious grind of training. To them, is due two days on which they may rest in quiet and recount, perhaps, the interesting features of their trips, their victories, and their defeats.

Inspiration of one kind or another, is one of the biggest influences in our world. Fatherly advice, from the dad who is furnishing the where-with all for our training, and the delightful coddling from the dear mother whose greatest interest is her children, is the most constructive inspiration in the world, and this day, of all days, is the one on which it should be given freely. Is it fair that those who want this, who need this, who have been planning for months on being able to go to their homes, should be kept here because one or two or three classes can't be sacrificed?

Nebraska students are fair. They try, in every way possible, to make their university better by serving it whenever they are called upon to do so. Many movements are entirely sponsored by the students themselves just for the good of Nebraska, such as the songbook, and the present drive to take one thousand rooters to Ames and show them what we have. The students are ready to respond to worth while calls of any kind—and always do. These same students are now calling for help upon those who have decided that the days following Thanksgiving shall not be holidays—we hope the response is as cheerful as the students always have been.

What do YOU think about it?

VESPERS.

Every Tuesday evening at 5 o'clock there are vesper services in Ellen Smith hall, conducted under the direction of the Y. W. C. A. This hour is devoted to a short religious service and prayer followed by the discussion of some topic of special interest to the students. Sometimes speakers of local or wide-spread fame are secured to speak and at other times faculty members or some of the students lead the discussions. Every question considered is of vital interest to all girls. Special music is generally provided and it is an hour of enjoyment as well as benefit.

The vesper services do what no other university organization is able to do quite as effectively—provide the finest kind of Christian fellowship. They are spiritually and morally uplifting and the girl that does not attend is depriving herself of real good. The meetings are so pleasant and inspiring that to go once means to go always.

Contemporary Opinion

(Uni. Daily Kansan.)
SHIFTLESS YOUTH.

Booth Tarkington, one of America's most brilliant novelists, has revealed the truth about his younger days. He confesses that up to the time he was thirty years old, he earned the exact sum of sixty-seven dollars and sixty-seven and a half cents. The seven and a half cents, says he was his share of a joint wage received by him and another boy for shoveling snow. He spent the half cent for a stick of candy.

"My first ambition," says Tarkington, "was to be an artist, not a financier or writer."
Which all tends to show that not every genius was a boy prodigy, as our mothers have taught us ever since they tucked our books under our arms, gave our tousled heads a pat, and sent us off to school.

And yet you can't blame the mothers. Theirs was legitimate trick of the parent's trade, shall we call it? They needed a way to arouse our interests and stir our ambitions—but they never cited a case like Booth Tarkington's as an example. It was Lincoln, Washington, and Napoleon that were referred to, and followed by admonition that every boy had a chance to become president.

Yes, it's plain to see, looking back over the past, that our parents were sagacious.

But oh, for just a mere inkling of the real truth what a balm 'twould have been to many a troubled childish conscience as it saw the way to the president's chair darkly obscured because of a violation of Washington's faultless "never told a lie" youth!

Folks are always worrying about the generation that is. They say we're bold and proud and gay, and never mind our biz. They holler 'bout our faithlessness and dependence on a line. They like to ridicule the things we think are big and one. They crab about the slogan "It takes a slick man to get by," and raise their hands in horror at a clever little lie. But say they're not so good themselves, and I'm right here to tell about some older generation guys who to our level fell. I walked behind two school boy men coming from "law" one day. They weren't young and gay no more for their hair was streaked with gray. The one says confidentially while the other lent his ear, "Naw, you don't have to do that, if you do you're slow and queer. Spel out a line to the good old Dean, you can easily get by him, I did, and say believe-you-me, my chances sure were slim."

The following notice was left in Rag office: "Mystic Fish party for all old fish, Delta Zeta house. Can you figure it out? Why not have the big swim at the high school pool."

Freshman don't cry because the up perclassmen won't answer your numerous questions. Cornhusker Queries will do the right thing by you, if you give it a chance.

A Thought for today

What is a Friend?

Have you ever heard a person say, "He is a friend of mine?"

And have you ever stopped to think whether that person meant a friend or just an agreeable acquaintance?

He is a wealthy person who owns two 'a' friends. A friend cannot be bought or sold, he is constant, he cannot be changed. Friends will never be commercialized.

A friend is a person to whom you can confide all your troubles and receive sincere counsel and advice in return.

A friend is a person who loves you, one who would suffer to give you peace.

A friend is a person who believes in you and would not desert you.

A friend is a person who remains true, in victory or defeat.

A friend is a person with a heart that is not tainted, with a soul that is not selfish, with a tongue that is
