A FRESHMAN SCHEDULE.

The suggestion presented by the Daily Nebraskan recently to have a regular football schedule for the freshman football team should meet with the heartiest approval of University of Nebraska students. In the freshman team the University relies entirely for its future teams and the first year men should be given every chance to improve their football tactics. The better freshman team there is, the better the next year's varsity squad will be.

In all of the high schools of the state where there are enough football and basketball candidates to warrant more than one team, the second team is given a schedule of games with teams of its class. Many of these games are played as preliminaries to the bigger games but many are with teams from small schools and the second stringers take a trip while the first team battles either on home or foreign ground.

A schedule for the University of Nebraska freshman squad could be so arranged as to have one or two contests played as preliminaries to big games possible with the freshman squad from the varsity opponents' school. Then there could be several games with teams from the many smaller colleges in the state and possibly the University of Nebraska freshman might be able to get a rating in the state conference.

Such a schedule would give to the first year men a further incentive to work hard. And the harder the freshmen work, the harder the varsity must work and a better football team will result. The constant drubbings which the freshmen take from the varsity are enough to entitle the freshmen to reward in the nature of a football schedule.

CORNHUSKER DEMOCRACY.

Democracy, that thing which means so much but which is hard to explain, is by no means lacking in the Husker school. Every student in Nebraska University stands on a par with every other student—there are no class distinctions of any kind.

No matter whether the boy be rich or poor, students at the Cornhusker school cannot tell from his clothes what his financial status may be. His father may be worth a million but he may appear on the University campus wearing corduroy trousers and a leather vest. And the best part of it is that his clothes have no bearing on his social status among his fellows.

On the campus the democratic spirit of the institution should further reveal itself by everyone greeting everyone else he meets on the campus. Whether or not he knows them by name, he has seen them, and seeing is enough to give a Cornhusker a speaking acquaintance with his fellow students.

Some say that one has no right to speak to another person unless he has been properly introduced. But every student on the Husker campus is a Cornhusker and on equal terms with everyone else. He is not to be blamed if he cannot remember every name that he hears. That is no reason why he should pass up a familiar eye. Last year owing to the financial stringency, the only company to go on face without a cherry "hello."

It all goes to make a more democratic University of Nebraska.

HOLES AND CURIOSITY.

Holes are peculiar creatures. No matter what their nature or where their location, they create in the human being a desire to investigate their character and purpose.

Holes in trousers, stockings or shirts always excite the interest of anyone who happens to be a witness to them before the possessor can discover his "error" and correct it.

But holes can serve a better purpose.

There is a story going the rounds of a hole that produced results. In a small town there was a new building being erected. Across the street there was a vacant lot. At the same time as the final touches were being put on the building, a group of men appeared on the vacant lot and began to dig a hole. They dug for several days without uttering a sound. Queries of passers-by who asked what the purpose of the hole was, failed to produce results. The diggers responded with very unsatisfactory answers. The more they dug the more people watched them.

Finally the building across the street was finished. When the final touches had been placed on it, the diggers across the street laid down their spades and went home. The next day the following sign appeared at the bottom of the hole: "The Majestic Theater will Open in the Building Across the Street for Regular Evening Performances, Tomorrow night at 8 O'clock."

No other sign appeared anywhere in the neighborhood, or for that matter in the town. But long before the time for the opening of the doors arrived, the sidewalk in front of the theater was jammed with people.

The hole with the ultimate sign at the bottom was the only place where an announcement had been made. Yet the curiosity of human beings had been such that a sign in the bottom of the hole had brought more than the desired results.

Contemporary Opinion

(Michigan Daily.)

YOUTHFUL PRODIGES.

A cut appears in the rotogravure section of a Sunday paper to the effect that "Henry Jones is the youngest freshman ever to enter Siwash university." Four years later another cut appears saying that "Henry Jones is the youngest student ever to graduate from Siwash university," and the biography of a youthful prodigy is written except for the death notice which mentions this fact under a medium-sized head in a local newspaper. Such is the case in the majority of such phenomena.

It is a natural, though regrettable fact that most precious youngsters fail to attain eminence. The prodigy's very youth, which would seem to give him a great advantage over his fellow, is his worst handicap. He lacks experience, knowledge of men, physical growth. Often his brilliance is mere receptivity—he cannot apply his knowledge to the solution of particular problems. Socially he is at a disadvantage, for he is too young to be really a member of his own generation.

Psychologists are continually advocating that exceptional children be given exceptional training, that their extraordinary abilities be cultivated and directed. This is a laudable effort to make the best use of such unusual capacities, but it may well be doubted that the effort will succeed unless some provision is made for their entrance into the more serious activities of life at a mature age. It seems the part of wisdom to allow these individuals the same time to develop their faculties that is allowed the average person, and let them acquire more knowledge in that length of time and develop themselves more fully.

In the meantime it would be well to collect figures on the accomplishments of the exceptional student in the outside world in order to have a solid basis for educating the prodigy in the most efficient manner, and for determining if he is worthy of special effort.

The Exhaust

Now that Ames has been successfully "tucked in the moth ball bag" as our Irish contemporaries would say, and the Missouri Valley Championship is clinched by the Cornhuskers, The next question to present itself is: "What shall be the fate of The Colorado Aggies?" And the answer echoeth, "Inasmuch as ye have Done it unto the least Of these thine enemies, So shall ye also do it Unto the stalwart boys From the Rockies." Yea, verily, amen. —F. F., Jr.
