BRITISH ECONOMIST TALKS TO STUDENTS

Former Editor of "London Economist" Speaks at Convocation Thursday Morning.

Francis W. Hirst, British economist and former editor of The London Economist, gave a critical review of the career of Lloyd George, the British premier, at convocation held at the Temple Thursday morning. The speaker told of the Premier's policies, his colleagues and his traits of character. Mr. Hirst is making a tour of American colleges and Nebraska is one of his stopping points on his way from the western coast to the east.

Mr. Hirst associated with Lloyd George from 1900 to 1910 when the Welshman was connected with the liberal party of which the speaker is a member. Lloyd George was against the Boer war and aided the restoration of self-government to the Boers at the close of the war. After the war he joined Mr. Hirst in a study of economic conditions. At one time he was photographed reading a copy of the London Economist and the speaker remarked that that was probably the only time that Lloyd George ever did read it. The British premier never had the strict interest in public economy that Gladstone showed.

After 1910, Lloyd George made a connection with the imperialist group and left the liberal party. From then on he became an opportunist. The coalition cabinet form of government was criticised by Mr. Hirst because in such a combination of leads of all parties the party views and motives are lost sight of and there is a lack of the constructive criticism that a cabinet made up of one party would receive.

There are no changes of the political principles of Lloyd George, the speaker declared because he has none. He has no particular aim for the government and adjusts himself to the conditions that arise. He cannot be accused of being consistent and it is fortunate that this is so. He does not believe in carrying out principles if they will prove disastrous to himself. In his earlier career he showed character and strength. He opposed the champion of the Boer war, Joseph Chamberlain and bitterly attacked him. Chamberlain had connections with an ammunition manufacturing firm and Lloyd George said that he wanted the British empire to expand so that the Chamberlains could contract.

However Lloyd George has lost some of his early moral fortitude, convictions, and prejudices. He has been in the government for sixteen years and Mr. Hirst declared that it would favorably affect the Premier's opinions if he left his office for a time and got another perspective through travel.

Lloyd George Biggest British Figure.
Lloyd George, the biggest British figure to American eyes at the present time, was born in Wales. He was educated by an uncle but did not attend a university. He studied to be a solicitor and championed the cause of the agricultural laborer and farmer in the courts. He was a radical at first but when the liberal party split in 1885 he joined the section led by Gladstone. He was a free churchman and all for Wales.

In his recent career, Lloyd George has not changed his political beliefs fundamentally, but changes them like a chameleon changes his color. Mr. Hirst stated. He is clever and astute. His cabinet is made up of men of various parties. Lord Curzon and Austin Chamberlain are Tories as was Bonar Law who was formerly in the cabinet. Liberals are also included in the coalition. This cabinet has carried on with remarkable success and there have been very few resignations.

Lloyd George did not carry out his campaign pledges of 1918 and it fortunate that he did not. He promised to make Germany pay for the whole war. At the present time his stand is that Germany should not pay any indemnity for several years until she is able to do so. Another campaign promise that the premier made was that the Kaiser would be brought to London, given a fair trial, and hung. But he could not very well hang a relative of the king of England and a fair trial would mean that the secret treaties that England had with Belgium and Russia would have to be exposed to publicity. After the war Belgium was demanding part of the territory of the Netherlands and Lloyd George got himself out of the dilemma by promising Holland British support in the controversy with Belgium if the Dutch government would refuse to deliver up the kaiser to the British government.

tines" together and conspired together to control the Scientific club and to get and keep control of the several debating clubs in the alleged interest of science.

Meetings were first held every Thursday afternoon at 4 o'clock. This custom of meeting once a week has prevailed and the regular meetings members of which are students, the faculty being excluded except upon invitation, are held every Wednesday evening from seven to eight. One of the members either a graduate student or undergraduate prepares a paper, which is read and discussed.

The faculty and students held joint meetings called the convocation when a member of the faculty reads a paper and all join in the discussion.

The first members were: Roscoe Pound, '88, dean of the Harvard law school. This year he is on leave at the Sarbonne in Paris.

Albert F. Woods, '90, president of Maryland state college of agriculture and consulting physiologist of United States department of agriculture.

Herbert J. Webber, '89, director citrus experiment station, California.

T. H. Marsland, '90, in business.

J. G. Smith, '88, in business in Honolulu.

T. A. Williams, '89, deceased.

J. R. Schofield, '88, clergyman.

The announcement of meetings is always proclaimed by a green poster with a large red seal, signed by either the Lord Warden, Doctor R. J. Peck, or Vice Warden William Bruner.

ANNUAL EXTENSION CONFERENCE SOON

W. H. Brokaw Issues Call To Prepare For Organized Ag. Week.

W. H. Brokaw, director of the extension service in the Agricultural college has issued a call for the annual extension conference to be held at the college December 28 to January 2, inclusive, just preceding organized agriculture week. The extension conference will be attended by the twenty-five or more extension specialists located at the college and nearly sixty extension agents representing forty-five counties. These agents are members of the Ag. college faculty, resident in the county seats and doing educational work among the farmers of the county and their families. The specialists are resident at the college and travel about the state assisting the agents.

The conference will be devoted to extension service problems, methods, and relationships to farmers organizations. Last year the specialists entertained the agents with a minstrel show on the first evening of the conference. This year the agents will return the compliment with an entertainment of the nature of which is a deep, dark secret.
