BACK AGAIN

A week of rest—then back at the old stand with renewed vigor and energy. For seven whole days all thoughts of books and classes were dispelled by home town activities and mother's cooking. We ate enough to last an average person the remainder of the year.

And now it is only eight short weeks until the end of the year. As the poet says, "Time flies, and it will soon be fly time." So much to do, and such a short space to crowd it all into. There are themes to write, reports to prepare, problems to solve—yes, hundreds of things to be done before we close the books for the last time and call it a good year.

But last week was a great help. It went far towards putting us into conditions for the ensuing quarter. We can step forth and clout the pill with more force and accuracy because of the "Breathing spell" that spring vacation brought us. We were going just a bit stale and the brief respite from the class room was a big help.

BELIEVE IN YOURSELF

Believe in yourself. That is the way to make other people believe in you, and it is the way to become what you want to be.

Unless you push yourself forward, others will push you back. If you never try to do more than you have always done, you will never know how much you can do. Success will only smile on the one who proves himself brave.

It is the people who have believed thoroughly in themselves and their missions who have made the world believe in them. Napoleon was a great general because it never occurred to him that he could lose. Luther changed the thought of Europe and the history of the world because he believed so thoroughly that he was right and nothing could daunt him. Columbus gained the support of a queen and found a world because his belief in himself inspired confidence in others. Fulton believed in his steamship in the face of a jeering population. History has hundreds of such cases which prove the value of belief in oneself. For unless you believe in yourself, knowing yourself better than anyone else knows you, how can you expect others to believe in you?

If the individual places faith in himself and supports his own purposes, he will soon find himself doing the thing that "couldn't be done." This is not a new thought, it is old as the hills and oft repeated, but it is wise advice to follow.

Contemporary Opinion

ON EXAMINATIONS

It has been said that in Spring a young man's fancy lightly turns to thoughts of love. Perhaps it does, but not if he has a set of quarterly examinations ahead of him. Educators consider examinations as useful things and necessary tests of proficiency. The young man in question would probably regard them as burdensome contrivances which might well be dispensed with.

This view appears to us to be a superficial one, the view of the man who wants to be with the crowd in condemning everything that means added work. No thoughtful man would want to exist without examinations—scholastic examinations, examinations of conscience, examinations of the past and of the probable courses to be travelled in the future.

Nothing shows more truly the depth of a man's thought and the sincerity of his purpose in life than the frequency of his inward examinations, when he confronts himself with the facts and figures concerning his past life and when the mental images of all his past deeds pass before him in review, some to smirk and to look scornfully at him as at one whose weaker nature has the upper hand, others to nod encouragement and to assure him that since he has done worthwhile things in the past he can do them again in the future.

Examinations always remind us of the assay offices in mining towns. To these offices the prospector brings his ore to have it tested and evaluated. Thus it is with us when we undergo examinations—we bring to the assay office of our own minds the memories of things committed. What a feeling of pleasure we experience when our findings come up to standard, when the things we have thought and the deeds we have done are such that we can show them to the world and defy adverse criticism. Our lives would be much better ones could we only keep before us the thought of the Final Examination when all our achievements will be assayed and the last pronouncement given.

LINCOLN PEOPLE BUY EXHIBIT PAINTINGS

Lincoln residents have purchased two of the paintings hung in the recent art exhibit in the Library. Professor Grumman hopes that this may offer a further inducement to artists to exhibit their work here.

An exhibit of draperies and of Indian designs are now on exhibit at the art gallery. The fabrics were loaned to the University in the interests of American industrial art and contains some of the outstanding examples of the numerous fabrics and designs obtainable for dress and decorations. The Indian designs were loaned by Professor Alexander of the Department of Philosophy and contains one hundred original drawings by Kenneth M. Chapman of the School of American Research at Santa Fe.

ALFRED REESE WINS SHOT PUT AT OXFORD

Alfred I. Reese, formerly of Nebraska University, won the shot put event for Oxford University in a track meet held there Saturday, March 25. Reese was selected as a Rhodes Scholarship man from Nebraska in 1921, this being his second year at Oxford. He has built up an excellent record since entering, winning his True honors in his first year.

While here he was a prominent figure on the track teams of 1917, '18, and the spring of 1920. He made a record shot put while here which was broken by Fred Dale of last year's track squad.

HUSKER GLEE CLUB SELECTS OFFICERS
