

ENGLAND AND UNITED STATES TO DEBATE

Universities Representing Two Countries to Debate League of Nations

Columbia University will face Oxford in a debate on the subject, "Resolved, The United States Should at Once Join the League of Nations." The Oxford men will support the affirmative, Columbia the negative.

This debate, which was scheduled by Paul W. White, manager of debating, is one of seven such contests confronting the Oxfordians on their American trip. The other schools they meet are Bates, Swarthmore, Princeton, New York University, Yale and Harvard. The last debate will be with Harvard just before the men sail for home.

A general committee, the members of which will be entitled to reserved seats, is being formed, consisting of men and women interested in the development of friendly relations between American and English colleges. All the other seats will be thrown open to the university students and officials free of charge.

John H. Finley of the New York Times, will act as chairman of the debate. Finley is a former president of the College of the City of New York, and a former commissioner of education for the state of New York. He is widely known as an educator and a writer.

A singular feature of the debate is that there will be no judges, a custom peculiar to English debating societies. Any decision rendered will be a popular vote, applause alone determining the advantage gained by either of the two sets of contestants.

The Institute of International Education is handling the itinerary of the invaders. Besides the League of Nations, the Oxford men will debate on trade unionism. Four schools have chosen the former subject, three the latter.

The Two Slick Traders

An unfair exchange is a slick robbery.

Honesty is the trade mark of the fair trader.

A good looking auto body may hide a poor going auto engine.

A fair exchange is no robbery—is the moral of "The Two Slick Traders" of the "Aesop's Film Fables" series.

The better the transaction the greater the satisfaction.

Devilish dealers deserve dire destruction.

Setting hens are standing examples of patience.

Easy though it may seem, milking cows is not all "cream."

Sure Cure.

We read the other day of a laughing hyena that escaped from a private zoo in New Jersey and got its tail cut off in a trap, like "The Fashionable Fox" in one of "Aesop's Film Fables." Ever since the accident this hyena has stopped laughing. In an effort to tickle the risibles of the beast, its owner its cage with comic pictures and jokes, but the hyena continued to hover in gloom. Now if the chap had only taken his hyena to see those funny jokes screened in "Topics of the Day" Films at the local movie theatre, the beast would have laughed as it never did before.

NO SENSE OF HUMOR

"Our daily peeve is the crutch who sits through a 'Topics of the Day' film without cracking a smile," says the Laporte, (Ind.) Herald. Humor rolls of the domes of some birds like water off a duck's back.

MODEL DAIRY

Fable: Once upon a time there was an actor playing a farmer in a movie comedy milking scene who did not stumble over the milk pail as part of the funny business at hand.

Italian Girl Compares Schools

Katherine Piazza, a Lincoln high school student who comes from Italy has told of some of her memories of Italy, although she has been a student of this high school for two years and has been in the United States even longer, she is still very enthusiastic about her native country.

"The schools are very, very much harder in Italy than in this country," she replied in answer to a question as to the similarities of the two. "Everyone pays tuition there and the school hours are very long, from eight to two, with only one half hour noon and no recess period. The boys and girls in the high school go to the same school but in the grades the girls go to one and the boys to another. The high school offers English, French and Latin, those preparing to become Catholic priests take Latin.

"The boys and a great many of the girls want to come to America," she continued, "for they have heard that it is a wonderful country. Since the war especially, they are eager to come because they have not the money to get comforts of life, and think that the United States is different.

"My own affections are divided between Italy and this country," she declares, "I loved the seas and the beautiful scenery and now I miss it. But I love too the freedom of this country. Why, here women can take any vocation they please, but there the only one open to them is teaching."

Then Katherine Piazza told something of the place in which she lived "Every house is made of stone because it is cheaper than wood. Around the city where I came from, Lermeni Interese, Sicily, is still a wall, built by the Bourbon kings and also an old Bourbon castle, uninhabited now. The town is one mile from the sea," she stated, "situated on a hill. Palermo, a large city twenty-four miles from Lermeni In erese, is as modern as any large city of the United States.

"On my return to Italy, I want to visit Naples," she continued. "I still remember the sky-blue water of the sea there."

Upon being asked what she intended to do with her life, she said eagerly, "Be a teacher. Ever since I was a small child that has been my ambition. I am going to the university and want to take every one of the languages taught there—seven of them. A great many of the girls in my country are what you would call music teachers."

Curran Tells of Associated Press

"The Associated Press is divided into two departments, news and traffic," said Thomas R. Curran, '21, Associated Press operator. In a short talk to Miss Sarah T. Muir's fifth period newswriting class Thursday.

"The traffic department keeps the wire in repair at all times, and the news department relays all over the continent. Most of the large cities are on one line and when an operator is sending, all of the other stations on that line are getting the news at the same time and with the exception of the heads, they must print it as they receive it.

"It is easy to make mistakes while receiving," went on Mr. Curran, because the signals are sent from thirty-five to fifty words a minute, and the use of two codes is confusing. Besides the Morse code, the Phillips code is used, which is made up of contraction of phrases somewhat like phrase writing in shorthand. For example POT means president of the city and one from Bayard.

and K. K. K. means Ku Klux Klan. Although many of the phrases used during the war are becoming obsolete, new contractions are coined as they are needed. If the operator is getting a message which contains several of these phrases, he can figure out their meaning even though he has never heard them before.

"There is almost no limit to the distance one can telegraph by using the repeater system," continued Mr. Curran. "One station can send and be heard by all of the papers on that line." Many of the large cities are on the same wire and they relay the news out over the surrounding territory to smaller towns.

"There are two trunk lines into Omaha and from there the news which the Associated Press correspondent thinks is important is sent to Lincoln and other towns over the state which cannot afford the expense connected with a trunk line station."

American Boy Holds Journalism Contest

A Victrola worth $125, a radio set, books, and athletic equipment are the prizes offered in a contest sponsored by the American Boy magazine for the purpose of promoting high school journalism. The best news article and the best editorial win lesser prizes. The big prize goes to the school whose pupil writes the best article on "Democracy in the School." The pupil writing the article gets a silver watch fob.

Boy Gets Tired While in Pool; Goes Under

Henry Schneider suddenly sank beneath the surface of the school pool, Thursday during the fourth period physical education class, while swimming in a relay race. Assistant Coach Gautsch, who was watching the boys, dived in and brought him to the top.

When Henry, who is a freshman, was questioned, he said that he got so tired he couldn't keep up any longer.

Prepares for Nov. 11

Armistice Day Will Be Filled With Events From Morning Until Morning

Alliance, (Special)—Armistice day, November 11, is being prepared for by local legionnaires. Four hundred visitors from neighboring towns are expected to take part in the celebration.

In uniform and in a body, all ex-service men will attend church services in the morning. A parade of the veterans, the auxiliary and other organizations will parade down the streets behind two bands from this city and one from Bayard.

A football game between the local high school team and the Bayard high school team will be followed by a regular old time army mess given by the ladies' auxiliary.

In the evening will be a boxing card to be announced later. A bowery dance will follow this.
