Editorial Winning First Prize Discusses Cultural Education

The editorial winning first prize in the annual intercollegiate editorial contest of 1922 of Pi Delta Epsilon is published in today's issue of The Daily Nebraskan. Other prize-winning editorials will be published in the near future.

THE CULTURAL EDUCATION
By William W. Keen Freeman

Senior, Mass. Institute of Technology
A graduate of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, in explaining why he was taking courses at Harvard in English, History and Philosophy, said that having got his training at Technology, he was getting his education at Harvard. In implying that even the best of our scientific schools did not fulfill the functions of a liberal college in preparing a man for the task, or the adventure, of living with his fellows, he reflected to some extent undergraduate opinion at the Institute. It finds expression in the agitation for more studies of a liberal character; in the conversation of the student, who constantly shows his approval of the liberal prior to the scientific education; in the number of men holding Arts degrees, in addition to those transferring from colleges before graduation.

We see thus a well-defined opinion that for a man to live the most useful and happy life, a liberal education is needed as a foundation even for scientific studies. That liberal studies have an even more tangible value may be concluded from the fact, as shown by a prominent life insurance company, that of those who earn salaries of $10,000 a year or more, 75 per cent are college men, though our colleges train only 1 per cent of the men in the country. Aside from the general quality of imagination or vision which is one of the attributes of the great leader, and which we believe is fostered by the study of ideas and men, which constitutes the humanities, there are many kinds of ability in which liberal studies provide training.

The study of English trains a man in clear and logical expression of his ideas; and a love of books furnishes him a never-ending source of new ideas. The man with a love of books is apt also to be steadier, having within himself resources for his leisure hours.

Psychology finds a constant use in advertising. The value placed by advertising also on a knowledge of History may be judged from the fact that an advertising company secured for one of its important positions a professor of History at a salary of $10,000. History is vital for the statesman. Financial history and economics are particularly important for the banker and the law-makers who lay our taxes and set our tariffs.

Latin and Greek words find continual use in the sciences and in law, architecture and medicine. The modern languages, and the ability to learn a new language with some facility are of increasing importance as our foreign trade grows.

Mary Garden understood the value of music to a city when she went to the business men of Chicago for support of the opera—and got it.

Whether we look at the liberal education as it affects our outlook upon life, or as we can make use of it in detail in our every-day work, we must conclude that there is good reason for the trend toward a liberal education which we have seen since the time when the war gave the country a new idea as to the worth of the college man.

An $8,000 printing press has just been bought out of the income from the Daily Oklahoman by students of the University of Oklahoma School of Journalism. The paper, established in 1916, is a laboratory for students in news-writing, editing, feature-writing and advertising.
