Publication of "The Tales of the Cornhuskers" again this spring is to be commenced. The athletic review of the major and minor sports at Nebraska published last spring was a great success.

The booklet is given free to letter men and forms a convenient record of the athletic events of the year. High schools over the state also receive copies of the Tales and youthful athletes should be influenced to come to Nebraska to display their prowess through the influence of the publication. A competent staff insures the success of this year's issue.

Spring football and preparation for the 1923 baseball schedule started just in time for the latest wintry snow. Practice would have to be held in the midst of the biggest snow of the season if carried out as planned. With the first baseball game only four weeks away, the new coach encounters this added difficulty at the start.

The track team has also been handicapped by the late winter with the result that valuable time for tryouts has been lost. On account of these drawbacks the coaches will need every ounce of support possible from the students. At the present time football, baseball, track, swimming, and wrestling are open to contestants—every athletically inclined student has a chance to show his mettle.

We surely must close to the realization that Nebraska has some good yells. A few days ago we read from the London Times of the impression which the Cornhusker yells made on English royalty. Today we read that at a banquet in the east, when Dr. Paul Harrison, Arabian missionary and Nebraska graduate, gave few Nebraska yells at a student banquet, they were interpreted as Arabian war whoops by some present.

If one graduate or a small group of them can create such a sensation with "U-U-Unl," we wonder what Englishmen and easterners would have thought if they could have heard the thousands of students cheering our fighting Cornhuskers on to victory over Notre Dame on last Thanksgiving day.

In almost any humorous publication, we can find stories which hinge on typographical errors—the printing of a wrong letter or the transposition of two letters. Oftentimes the results of such mistakes are funny, sometimes weird.

Every publication has these mistakes and every editor no doubt has to mourn over the results of them. When they are harmless we are only thankful that they were no worse. But an explanation is due when such a mistake as appeared yesterday in this column appears in print. The result was not funny, but only appeared as a reflection on the mental capacity of the writer. We find printed the word "buried" instead of "hurried"—with quite a difference in meaning.

The moral—if you can make neither head nor tail to some comment don't always blame the writer for being a simpleton, but watch out for the typographical errors.

Formation of a new alumni club at Sioux City is welcome news. Development of wide awake clubs of former Nebraska students is the best sort of thing for the University and it certainly does no harm for the alumni themselves to keep in closer touch with their alma mater.

Alumni clubs over the country responded in a fine manner in the stadium campaign as they always do when some way to help this institution is brought before them. With the grads organized into clubs, it is also much easier to advertise Round-up Week for alumni, Homecoming and special occasions of this sort. Each new club is a boost for the school and shows that Nebraska is developing along a much needed line—closer contact with her former students.

Nebraska Alumni in Sioux City Organize

Graduate and former students of the University of Nebraska now living in Sioux City, Iowa, held a temporary alumni association meeting when Alfred Pizey was elected president of the Sioux City Association and Miss Marian O'Connell was chosen secretary. Fred F. Dawson a graduate of the Princeton University, was the principle speaker. He spoke of the need of an alumni association and of the benefits derived from keeping alive the ties that bind every graduate and former student to his alma mater. The co-operation of the members of the Alumni Association, the faculty, and the student body have made possible the Nebraska stadium is now under construction. The need of a state museum, dormitories where students will be under supervision of the faculty, and a gymnasium to provide adequate facilities for physical training was emphasized by Dean Dawson. Following the address the Sioux City association subscribed $600 for the school.

Better Care—Longer Wear
Keep two or three suits in service and wear them alternately. It's a real economy.
Never hang up a coat except on a hanger. The washbone type is best. It keeps a coat in the same shape as when worn.
Get the wash-broom habit. Brush daily those parts of the coat facing your linen collars and your cuffs. It will save on your laundry bill.
For keeping winter clothing during the summer use dust-proof clothes bags.

During Vacation

Vacation time—the hardest wearing test of all for your clothes. It's then that real clothes-making tells—the fine materials, the skillful designing, the extra amount of tailoring, which is put into Kirschbaum Clothes.
