A prize of one hundred dollars to the Nebraska student who writes the words and music for a musical production to be given by the Kosmet Klub next spring has been offered by the members of Kosmet.

The offer will not be passed over lightly by many students who know of the success of past Kosmet plays and of the fine opportunity open to young playwrights all over the country. More than one Nebraska student, and some of these authors of Kosmet plays, have made good at the playwright game and today are wealthy men.

The Kosmet play this year was a student production and the stimulation of further such efforts among the students of this University is the prime purpose of the Klub. When the Kosmet men urge that work on new plays be started early this summer in order that a play may be selected in the early fall, they should find a large number of students eager to respond.

The financial report on the stadium campaign brings Nebraskans face to face with the fact that a large sum of money must yet be raised before the memorial can be completed. While the dream of having the stadium ready for the 1923 football season will be realized, the entire structure cannot be completed by that time. The indoor track will not be ready for use next year unless pledges are promptly made in the near future.

The Alumni association has no money to spend on travelling expenses for promotion work, yet promotion work must be done among Nebraska alumni if the stadium is to be what all Nebraska students want it to be. How then is the promotion work to be done. Through the present student body. For three months while students are away on their summer vacations, they will be meeting Nebraska ex-students and alumni. What better opportunity to tell of the needs for the stadium, to boost Nebraska and to accomplish something really worthwhile for the school can be found? Let every undergraduate carry with him or herself this summer the story of the stadium and the pressing need for more pledges and prompt payments.

The theory has been advanced that the reason students cheat is that our educational system is at fault. Can it be that dishonesty of this sort is excusable by such an excuse?

What is the difference between stealing a roommate's jewelry and his theme? Is there a difference between physical theft and intellectual theft? Certainly there is very little difference as far as the dishonesty of it is concerned. Yet when one says he would not tolerate such a thing as the former theft and then says that taking a roommate's theme is excusable because his instructor is making the course too hard for him and that he can't write themes himself, what are you to think of that individual?

By the time a student comes to the University he is supposed to have reached a point of development where he can control himself. To say that a student was honest before he came to college and turned on his principles after he saw other people doing it is absurd. If he has strength of character he can and will do his work the best he knows how and will take the consequences.

The faculty are not policemen. It is not their business to go around and see that students get their education. They offer their bit to the students in the best way they can. When it is a matter of the student leaving it or taking it. This is merely a result of large schools. It can be no other way. The instructors cannot be expected to give personal conferences in large classes. In some places this is possible but in most cases it is impossible.

From the moral standpoint there is no excuse for dishonesty no matter under what stress one is placed. The principle holds in all walks of life and here at the University where we are supposed to be a rather selected lot we should stand on a higher plane than the common run of life.—The Daily Kansan.
