Upperclassmen Display Spirit Of Comradship to Newcomers

Those who know have said that the very act of recognizing one's own good qualities detracts decidedly from one's charm. 'Tis a foregone conclusion that the members of our institution possess charm, and we would hate to say or do anything to detract from the unusual and delightful quality, but—and herein lies the tale.

Our freshmen have recognized and even ventured to comment upon the pleasing, and even generous comradeship of the upperclassmen. Thus they make it a necessity that we recognize our own attitude in the matter. It is a delightful atmosphere to create, this feeling of helping and doing something for the stranger and making him recognize at first sight the qualities about our campus life that have endeared it to us and made it a part of us.

The women have put much time and effort into the carrying out of the "Big Sister Movement," and through this work have created a comradeship among the incoming girls and the upperclasswomen that lives throughout the school year as a permanent association. This desire to help every new matriculate is a happy one, and we don't leave it to the freshmen to comment upon—we hold it as a standard up to which every Nebraskan must live.

We're proud of the fact that the strange man hesitates not a second to approach any man in sight with his question, however trivial it may seem. And we are prouder still of the upperclassman who replies so readily:

"That's all right, old man. I'm mighty glad I could answer it."

Freshman Girls!

"But aren't the girls to be 'unified'?" And a freshman girl delighted in showing off her newly acquired habit of a daily perusal of The Daily Nebraskan, almost wailed as she expressed her disappointment.

"It says here that the men of the freshmen class are made to wear those funny green caps just so they will know each other. Don't the girls have something to distinguish each other by—not even a badge?" "Silly!" exclaimed her sophisticated sophomore sister. "You would not want to have to wear anything green. Why just think how unbecoming it would be with that perfect new peacock sweater of yours! And besides, this way, people may take you for an upperclassman, even a senior."

We wonder.

She: Why, I don't know you.
Flirt: Well, I don't know you either. Look at the chance I'm taking.

create real spirit in the freshman class.

A great deal of effort has been put into the designing of the caps in order to make the wearers feel as inconspicuously conspicuous as possible. It is the turn of the freshmen to do their share by wearing the caps.
