LEARN TO SHAKE HANDS

For several weeks, men and women have been shaking hands at almost every turn. And their personality is very often indicated by the way that they shake hands. Have you ever stepped up to some stranger to whom you are being introduced, taken a hold of his hand, and found it lacking in the grip, firmness, and genuine feeling of warmth that you expect? Instead of a hand, you get a finger or two and they felt like a dishrag.

If you are going to shake hands, for your own good, do it right. Grasp the hand of the other person firmly, and if he doesn't do the same, both have merely gone through an ordeal. Hand shaking is important. Learn how it is done. Those feeble grips are disgusting.

FRESHMAN INITIATION

Yesterday morning several hundred freshmen met in the Armory for the sole purpose of learning Nebraska spirit in as artificial a manner as possible. Without the aid of upperclassmen, those Nebraskans followed yells, sung the "Cornhusker," and indicated that they were the elements that were to make Nebraska the greater University that every one fights for.

In that spirit of real love for the institution that they have chosen, that mass of individuals united in a spontaneous effort to let the old Nebraska know that there were many hundreds of young Nebraskans who were ready to fight with the athletic teams, who were willing to sacrifice so that Nebraska might have a new stadium, who will try to push the scholastic standing to an even higher level, and who are sworn to be real Nebraskans.

COLLEGE DRESS.

When David Star Jordan was president of Leland-Stanford University, he encouraged boys to wear old clothes to classes. President Jordan did not believe in untidiness but he did believe that an outlay of money on expensive clothes to wear to school was foolish.

The boys took to the idea with an aptitude that might surprise those who believe that the male is vain. The result is quite refreshing to outsiders. In the summer the accepted costume seems to be a pair of white flannel trousers, preferably old and not too clean, a soft collar shirt and no tie, and either no hat at all or else a hat of the western type. There is a complete absence of young men who appear as if they might be serving as models for stylish clothes. Only students who have come to Stanford from other schools make any attempt to keep up the appearance that is almost essential on middle western and eastern campuses.

A somewhat similar idea has been practiced at the University of Montana. There the winter does not permit the costume of the white flannel variety so the student who wishes to look like his fellows dons a pair of corduroy or khaiki riding trousers and boots.

Whatever the retail clothiers may think of this idea there can be no doubt that it promotes a healthier spirit on the campus. It eradicates whatever artificial distinctions clothes may make and puts everyone on the same footing. The result is a feeling of friendliness, of democracy—that is manifested in the "hello" way and it is this feeling which is missing on most of the eastern campuses and which has even disappeared to some extent from the schools in the middle west and the Missouri Valley.

Announcement has been made that examinations will be held soon for men who wish to qualify for the Rhodes scholarship. This is an honor that falls to but few men. Eligible students, who think that they can measure up to the standards set, are urged to apply.

Merely Opinion

Tryouts for cheerleaders will be held at the Armory Monday afternoon. Several men with unusual abilities will find this a profitable way to serve Nebraska. Much depends upon the men who lead the yells.

Churches give their first receptions Friday evening. Freshmen are more than anxious to become acquainted with one another. Receptions at churches give them an occasion to meet one another, to meet members of the churches and the pastors. Take advantage of the opportunity.

This is the fifty-fifth year for Nebraska and there is not an alumnus nor a student that is not willing to work to see it better than any year in history. Coach Schulte told the freshmen that they were not Nebraskans until they had learned loyalty. Neither are the students that have been here for years without sacrificing a thing.

Watch the football team workout. Illinois is frantically endeavoring to get into shape in time to whip Nebraska. Show Nebraska's football team that you know.

Alumni in the state of Nebraska and others interested in this institution can get the news from the University of Nebraska through a scheme of co-operation between the Daily Nebraskan and Frank J. Moles, radio operator. Every day at 12:40 p. m., news items, taken from the columns of this paper, are broadcast.

Freshman girls for the first time in history of the University of Nebraska will wear a sign of recognition. Green buttons, bearing the numbers "27" will be worn by all freshmen girls.
